HANDING DOWN THE MISSION

REFLECTIONS ON THE EXAMPLE OF THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

LEADING THROUGH AFFIRMATION AND CHALLENGE

BROTHER MICHAEL J. MCGINNISS, F.S.C., PH.D., '70, PRESIDENT, LA SALLE UNIVERSITY

THE WORD "LEADER" ALWAYS brings back memories for me of watching President John F. Kennedy deliver his first inaugural address in 1961. Along with many members of my generation, I found him and what he had to say on that bitter cold winter's day inspiring and challenging. Ever since, I've expected that leaders, in whatever area of life, have a like capacity for rhetorical eloquence and moral vision.

The 40-plus years since JFK's speech have added other qualities to my understanding of leadership. In fact, today I'd say that leadership has less to do with giving that one inspiring speech (though speech-making is vitally important to my work as a university president) and more to do with everyday things, some tangible and some not—how one relates to other people, how much integrity one has, the depth of one's convictions, especially one's faith in God. Two people, both Christian Brothers, taught me these lessons by the quality of their lives and the example of their leadership.

The late Brother David Ryan, F.S.C., was in charge of the Brothers' house of studies in which I lived during my four years as a La Salle College undergraduate, 1966 to 1970. Current hindsight makes those years out to be at best "turbulent," but I found them exhilarating. Change was all around—in the Church after Vatican II, in the Brothers' Rule, in politics and social mores. But David's faith in God, in the value of being a Christian Brother, and in the potential of each very young student Brother provided solid ground when all around us the foundations seemed to be shaking. David did that by being a good listener (even to very confused student Brothers), by being patient, by his sense of humor about himself and us, by his love of the Brotherhood, and by his very evident faith. And, yes, he often spoke very eloquently in his regular conferences to the community of student Brothers. I have David to thank for introducing me to Paul Tillich, the great theologian who has so influenced my academic career and work.

Brother Colman Coogan, F.S.C., twice served multiple terms as Visitor of the Baltimore District during my 39 years as a Brother. I have heard more than one of my confreres describe him as the most influential member of our District over the past five decades. In my experience of him, Colman exercised that influence by his unique capacity to combine affirmation and challenge—of the District of Brothers, of smaller community groupings, and above all, of individuals. Colman always communicated that he loved and accepted us as Brothers as we were, while also believing and reminding us that we could be better, more faithful to our mission, closer to God. Like almost all of the current members of the District, I heard Colman give speeches and reflections that were eloquent, but my most powerful experiences of his leadership came in private conversations. When I was a grad student at Notre Dame, Colman often visited me for a couple of days at a time. I would go off to class during the day, and he would hide out in what is now called Hesburgh Library, taking the opportunity to catch up on his reading. Each evening, we'd have dinner and talk—about theology, about the Brothers, about me. I felt that gift of affirmation and challenge firsthand, and I'm a better person and Christian Brother for it.

HANDING DOWN THE MISSION

REFLECTIONS ON THE EXAMPLE OF THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

On the next few pages, several Brothers and laypeople write about the always-reverberating impact other generations of Brothers had on their minds, hearts, and career paths. They also delve into what the Brotherhood means to them as a vocation and an institution. The common thread connecting each of these stories is the unwavering dedication, unconditional love, and vast knowledge these men have shared with their students. In the past, present, and future, the Christian Brothers always teach best through their example.

CHANGING THE LIVES OF INDIVIDUAL STUDENTS

BROTHER EMERY C. MOLLENHAUER, F.S.C., PH.D., L.H.D., ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH, FORMER LA SALLE ADMINISTRATOR

LIKE MANY BROTHERS WHOSE vocation dates from pre-Vatican II days, my world before becoming a Brother was located amid an (Irish) Catholic ethos, a happy but culturally rather cloistered community where vocations were plentiful. Though memories of my many years as a Christian Brother remain part of a precious, incommunicable past, the survey which follows may lack gritty immediacy for some and may seem almost mythic to the MTV generation.

At West Philadelphia Catholic High School, then staffed by a community of well over 60 Christian Brothers, we had Brothers for all courses for all four years. What we now speak of as Lasallian values were conveyed quite effectively through the presence and lives of the Brothers. Students sensed and saw a refreshing spirit of acceptance, a pervasive fairness, an honest respect for the individual person, a responsiveness to others' needs, a commonsensical approach to the whole educational enterprise, and an environment of shared mission. Moreover, the lack of clerical distinctions reflected and made appealing the reality of Brotherhood.

The great majority of students admired and liked the Brothers as teachers and, especially when associated with the Brothers in extracurricular activities, grew to be aficionados of the Brothers and their charisma. In my own case, having been editor-in-chief of the newspaper had much to do with my appreciation of the Brothers' vocation. Immediately after high school, I joined the Brothers and went through our five-year religious formation program of a novitiate and then, along with 130 like-minded young men, a four-year scholasticate at the Catholic University of America.

In the immediately following years, I gave my youth to Pittsburgh, where I had rewarding and memorable years teaching, pursuing graduate degrees, and moderating school publications and student government. I also had the privilege of sponsoring a few young men who became Brothers. Following a year of study and reflection in our Motherhouse in Rome (1960), I was assigned to teach at the (then) La Salle College. Early in the second semester of my first year at La Salle, our provincial appointed me Dean of our Evening Division. During my eight years as dean, as well as in subsequent years (1969-1991) as Academic Vice President and Provost, I tried to keep in touch with students and the professional life by regularly teaching one course each semester.

After resigning from administration, I returned happily to the apostolate that attracted me to the Brothers in the first place: full-time teaching. Currently, I enjoy the demanding but rewarding experience of meeting well over 90 students each semester, and, as far as I can ascertain, teaching and rapport with students have progressed well enough.

Early this semester, I called a neighboring six pack of students at 3:30 on a Monday morning to complain about their noisiness. When I opened with a clearly gruff "hello," a student responded jauntily, "What's up?" I retorted, "For starters, it's 3:30 a.m. and I'm up." Less amusing is the reality that in recent years some students address me (respectfully) as "Mr." or "Dr." or "Professor" or "Father." Such mild tremors to our sense of significance subside, however, in the presence of the strong support we Brothers receive from our colleagues, the rapport most Brothers enjoy with their students, especially those who have come from our own high schools, the exhilaration that follows an especially successful class session, and the occasional report of how we unwittingly changed the lives of individual students significantly.

FELLOW WORKERS IN THE VINEYARD

SID MACLEOD, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF COMMUNICATION

2007 RECIPIENT OF THE RARELY AWARDED
AFFILIATE CHRISTIAN BROTHER DESIGNATION

WHY WAS I NAMED AN HONORARY Christian Brother? I guess that I am one of the “fellow workers in the vineyard.”

Many years ago, La Salle had an incredible teacher, Dr. Roland Holroyd. He was also an Affiliate Christian Brother. Once, in the introduction to a talk, after recognizing clergy, administrators, etc., he recognized his colleagues. He called us—the faculty—“fellow workers in the vineyard.” I have been a partner with the Brothers at La Salle for more than four decades. We teach, we counsel, we advise, and most of all, we hope to touch the hearts and minds of our students.

When I came to La Salle in 1959, there was no manual on how to teach, how to treat the students, or how to be a colleague. You learned by example—the example of the Brothers and the teachers who had been influenced, or taught, by the Brothers. It’s interesting that the experience has finally been labeled, although the concept has been around for a long time. The current word is “Lasallian.”

I’m not really sure that my designation as Affiliate Christian Brother entails anything specific. I think it is a humbling honor rather than a litany of duties and benefits. I must confess that I have parked my car in the “Brothers Reserved” spaces on campus a few times. Some of my most meaningful “Brothers” experiences have been holiday celebrations at the Roncalli Center, a Brothers residence, and doing a video on the Brothers’ ministries in the Baltimore Province.

I first met the Brothers at St. Mary’s College in Winona, Minn. It is now St. Mary’s University of Minnesota. Before that, I was educated in high school by the Irish Christian Brothers. I have always been impressed by men and women of the cloth, non-clerics, who dedicated their lives to teaching.

Today, more than ever, the involvement of lay people in the ministry of the Christian Brothers is very important. As a lay person and an Honorary Brother, I imagine that I am an example of that. The Brothers and I have the same ministry. More and more, the Brothers are honoring those who participate with them—their partners. In all of the Brothers’ schools and ministries, lay people are partners in the missions and goals that were established by St. John Baptist de La Salle. We all are workers in the same vineyard.

TEACHING WITH “PASSION AND COMPASSION”

BROTHER ED SHEEHY, F.S.C., '68
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF HISTORY

THE SCENE: LA SALLE HIGH School, Cumberland, Md. The Time: early 1960s. Plans: attend La Salle College (then), major in history or political science, and then teach, work for the government, or become a lawyer. At that point, the principal of the school, Brother Jeremy McNamara, asked this 16-year-old to consider the Christian Brothers.

Reluctance, then a yes. Why? Because people like Brother Gerry Molyneux, '58, of our Communication Department (even though he was the only Brother to give me detention—April 1963, not that I remember that stuff) were teachers, advisers, moderators, and authentic Brothers.

Fast forward to now. What do we teach? One wonders if the content is as important as teaching who we are: Brothers. The key remains—respect for self, respect for others, respect for life at all ages, and responsibility for actions. Respect for the students. There are no “dumb” questions in a lively, interactive classroom experience. Well, okay, maybe one or two. Example: last semester’s classic—“How many letters in the alphabet?” response from student: “27.” 27?! “Yes, X, Y, ‘N,’ Z!”

It was no coincidence that St. La Salle spoke to his Order’s members as “Brothers.” For well over 300 years, and during our 141 here at this University, the Brothers have been just that for students—“older adults” working with “younger adults.” Brothers have an extended family. Last semester, speaking with a group of students, one mentioned that I didn’t have any children. I said, “You are all my children.” Hokey as that sounds, they laughed, and remembered it. Hopefully, our students see us as mentors—not without warts, of course (my interest in trivia and Spongebob Squarepants intrigues some).

Throughout the turmoil of the past 40 years, the key to the “success” of the Brothers has been two-fold, I think. First, education in the broadest sense remains our mantra. Secondly, the Brothers have begun more and more to share this charisma of teaching, and the twin signs of the Institute—faith and zeal—with our colleagues in the educational mission.

We still remain an involved group because we believe that education is a seamless garment—that the classroom only provides part of the process of mutual learning. For we learn and grow and are energized by the younger adults, too. Whether it’s insight in the formal academic setting, or conversing in the Food Court or offices, I continue to marvel at how much there is to learn from today’s generation. Their commitment to community service, ability to roll with the punches, and to bond in a time of community tragedy can teach us a lot.

The Brothers in Cumberland, Md., taught with “passion and compassion.” Our mission we have chosen is to continue that calling. We do so in step with other committed teachers who desire, in St. La Salle’s words, “to touch hearts” through “faith” and “zeal,” for as the prophet wrote in the Old Testament, “those who instruct others unto justice shall shine as stars for all eternity.”

APPLYING VALUES TO THE GYMS AND PLAYING FIELDS

BROTHER JOHN KANE, F.S.C., '80, M.A. '87

DIRECTOR OF ACADEMIC SUPPORT SERVICES FOR STUDENT-ATHLETES

I WAS NEVER THE BEST PLAYER ON THE TEAM WHEN I was growing up. I was the type of kid who sat next to the coaches on the bench. Initially, I believed that if the head coach saw me first, then I would get more playing time. Once I realized that the coach usually knew whom he wanted to put in, I still sat near the coaches. I then enjoyed watching them and seeing how they coached and made decisions. You could learn a good deal sitting next to the coach. I thought I would like to do this some day as well.

My father was a La Salle graduate, class of 1952, so growing up, I was a La Salle fan. I remember going to the Palestra to see Kenny Durrett play. I think back then that I knew I would also go to La Salle. I had no real idea what a Christian Brother was at the time. Like many others, I initially thought La Salle was named after the explorer.

My first real contact with the Brothers came at La Salle High School. I was immediately impressed with them as teachers, but more so for whom they were. The Brothers got to know you outside the classroom. They were moderators and ran activities. They came to games and supported students in whatever activities they were involved with. It was clear that the Brothers cared for their students. By my senior year, I had become friendly with a number of Brothers, and one asked me if I ever thought about becoming a Brother. I told him that I actually had. A few years after that, I entered the Community.

My love of athletics never left, and as a Brother, I discovered many opportunities to be involved with sports. During my first 20 years as Brother, I was in high school working as a teacher and administrator. I always was connected to athletics as a moderator or coach. I also spent eight years as athletic director at West Catholic, here in Philadelphia. Like the Brothers who had an impact on me in high school, I knew it was important to get to know students outside the classroom. For me, athletics was a good means to do so.

I came to La Salle University five years ago, when there was an opening for Director of Athletic Operations. Eventually, I was made Assistant Athletic Director. I remember when I was 10 or 11, I was with my father driving past La Salle; we pulled over to look at Hayman Hall, which was under construction. Later, during my undergraduate days, I spent almost every afternoon in Hayman playing basketball. Little did I realize that I would be running the building some day. Just recently, I switched jobs to become the Director of Academic Support Services for Student-Athletes. I value the level of interaction with our student-athletes this new position affords me.

There is a lot of warranted criticism of athletics today, especially at the collegiate level. However, I am still convinced that, done the right way, athletics is a wonderful tool to help young people grow into the best they can be. As a high school athletic director, I used to make sure my coaches knew that I considered them all educators, whether they were teachers or not. I believe it is the same at this level. Working in a Lasallian school demands this of our coaches and staff. I am uplifted on a daily basis as I watch La Salle's coaches interact with student-athletes. Our coaches get it. As a Christian Brother in athletics, I can serve as a reminder of the values that have been ours for over 300 years, and that they do apply to the gyms and playing fields. It gives me joy to see the willingness of our coaches, staff, and most especially, our student-athletes, to embrace these values as their own. Athletics has been a big part of my life. I realize that, at this time, it is a blessing to be able to carry out my vocation as a Christian Brother working with the student-athletes at La Salle University.

THE SILENT EXAMPLE OF THEIR LIVES

BROTHER JAMES BUTLER, F.S.C., '82, LA SALLE BOARD OF TRUSTEES, AUXILIARY PROVINCIAL AND DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION FOR THE BALTIMORE DISTRICT OF THE BROTHERS OF THE CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS

"EMERY? WHAT KIND OF A NAME is Emery? I've never met an Emery in my life." I can clearly remember that reaction when, early in 1978, I opened my letter of acceptance to La Salle College (as it then was). A high school student of the free and easy '70s, I certainly knew that there was some group called the Christian Brothers who made wine—nondescript domestic table wines and something exotic called "Meloso Cream Sherry." I had seen the name Brother Timothy, Cellarmaster, on the back of the bottles but never knew these guys had anything to do with education. I was to learn better.

I also have a second recollection associated with receiving that "fat envelope" of acceptance that was eventually to set the direction for my life in so many unexpected ways. I remember looking at that signature and wondering, "Why doesn't he sign his last name?" I could see it was a little long, but, nevertheless, I had received other acceptances from Jesuit colleges and universities, and they were always signed something like, "Rev. John P. McGowan, S.J." Here was an acceptance from an academic vice president who seemed to want to be on a first-name basis.

Puzzling to a 17-year-old, but also a taste of what was to follow. Although I had never met a Christian Brother in my life before coming to La Salle, I was quickly to learn that it was this "first-name basis," this "Lasallian personalism," if you want to get fancy about it, that was to be characteristic of my relationship with the Brothers.

It was years later that I was to learn to say, "the heart of a Lasallian school is relationships." It was probably a number of years after that that I truly came to understand what it was about. The Brothers, competent scholars and educators though they might have been, were first and foremost about people.

I got taught that lesson as early as my first registration day at La Salle. While the imperturbable Brother John Owens, F.S.C., directed events on these hectic days with preternatural authority, he was assisted by an elderly Brother in the traditional habits. Rosary beads in one hand, he handed out registration cards with the other. But Brother E. James Conaghan, F.S.C., never simply performed the function. He looked at each card, saw the individual's address, and made some comment to each student who approached his desk. He might ask about the parish, the high school, a local luminary, but the effect was the same—you were an individual, somebody it was worthwhile knowing. That's a lesson the Brothers have always taught, each in his own way.

A later lesson I came to learn at La Salle was that the Brothers respected individuals perhaps at least partially because they were such rich individuals themselves. There was little evidence of the "batch mentality" sociologists tell us affect those who live in structured groups. Each one brought something unique—and delightful—to his classroom or social interaction with us. There was the whispered insight of Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., as he taught us to walk through the walls of a poem. Contrast this with the rollicking enthusiasm of Brother Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., singing whole numbers from a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta in his Satire class. I recall the sight of the erstwhile elegant Brother Jack Dondero, F.S.C., '45, laughing so hard at lunch that he sprayed chocolate milk all over his white shirt and silk tie. There was Brother Joseph Keenan, F.S.C., '56, the master raconteur, illustrating abstruse theological points with stories of his North Philadelphia boyhood, bantering with the man we knew was his best friend, the priceless ironic Brother Edward Davis, F.S.C. We had our working class scholars, too—Brother Claude Demitras, F.S.C., '53, and Brother James Muldoon, F.S.C., '55—approachable and unpretentious whatever their administrative positions.

There were those who still possessed a youthful enthusiasm. We had Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., '58, with his fraternity, Brother Jerry Fitzgerald, F.S.C., '70, anywhere and everywhere, and Brother Richard Hawley, F.S.C., in the biology lab. I still remember one major who was a floor-mate on Bernard's coming home and commenting on anatomy class: "I had a pregnant cat. Br. Rich was so excited. He was like a sixth grader about it."

Then there were those who had nothing of the pre-adolescent about them. Though I only saw them at a distance and in their senior citizen mode, Brothers David Cassian Prendergast, F.S.C., Gilbert Jude Sapone, F.S.C., and Giles Raymond Wilson, F.S.C., still had "ivy Lasallian stares" that could strip the paint off walls. In their black robes, they resembled the then-contemporary Darth Vader. In demeanor, they made Darth Vader look like Mr. Rogers. It was an article of faith among many of my generation that Br. Giles Raymond carried a gun. It seemed obvious to me from looking at him that he wouldn't hesitate to use it. All in all it was a parade of human characters as rich as that in The Canterbury Tales. And generally every bit as funny.

"Why'd you become a Brother?" It's a question many students have asked me over the years. And I never had a very good answer. Certainly none of these guys ever asked me (they were probably also good judges of character). But it was the silent example of their lives that worked the trick. It wasn't "I can be like them"—because they clearly weren't any one particular way. It was the example of the way they lived their individual lives, and the interest they took in ours, that inspired so convincingly. I could be myself and still be one of a greater "us." It's not only the stuff of a religious vocation. I think this is a principle that any "Brothers' boy" (from years gone by) or graduate of a Lasallian school (as we say today) would understand. It's simply how we do business.

And do magic.

“YOU ARE AN IMPORTANT PART OF SOMETHING MUCH BIGGER THAN YOURSELVES”

BROTHER JOSEPH GRABENSTEIN, F.S.C., '73
ARCHIVIST FOR THE BALTIMORE PROVINCE AND LA SALLE UNIVERSITY

“BROTHER JOE, YOU HAVE A JOB that will never end!”

Not long ago, a student uttered those words to me as we concluded a 30-minute tour of the Archives. His sentiments match mine perfectly. In a sentence, I preserve the long-term memory of the legacy of La Salle University and of the Christian Brothers. But that job has evolved into a vocation-within-a-vocation which is more stimulating and rewarding than I ever expected.

We all have our interests, hobbies, and passions. Mine is history. I was born in a small Maryland city with no shortage of history markers and landmarks from various eras. I grew up on a busy street which had borne (150 years earlier!) a much slower traffic of westward bound covered wagons and stage coaches. (Perhaps you have heard of the old Cumberland Road.) I studied and read history with pleasure. After graduating from La Salle in 1973, I taught it for 18 years. During that time, I accumulated boxes and boxes of souvenirs, newspaper articles, graphics, anecdotes—anything which could be held, displayed, or related in a classroom in order to catch a youngster’s eye and ear. History definitely has a vibrant dimension, and I have always tried to find it. I’ve been a military reenactor (would you believe a Redcoat?) in a TV miniseries about George Washington. I’ve given informal tours of Gettysburg and Harper’s Ferry. I’ve been asked to do much research and writing of history for the Christian Brothers. And I’ve been archiving history here at La Salle since 1992. Approximately 90 percent of my clientele can’t believe how many materials I have about their selected topic. My best advertisement is satisfied customers, and I’m blessed to count them in the hundreds.

Because the Archives is in College Hall’s lower level, some have dubbed it “the Batcave,” or “the land down under,” or even “the Dungeon.” No problem. I prefer to think of our Archives, however, as a walk-in time tunnel. It’s fascinating to watch the faces of my clients and guests when they visit. They always enjoy seeing the most recent La Salle beer stein or vintage Explorer basketball game program which I purchased on eBay. Their eyes and smiles express sufficient gratitude when they behold the old black-and-white photographs which match their needs perfectly, or when I provide a document or news clipping which boosts their term paper or augments their research on a La Salle alumnus.

No, the Archives is not a classroom. But the old maps, handwritten student roll books, videotapes, scrapbooks, and other sources are “power-point” enough for me. After all, it’s our story we’re preserving—and sharing. We have a rich legacy to tell and re-tell. Since the mid-’90s, I have given about 30 presentations per year to La Salle students, mostly freshmen. (This doesn’t include numerous presentations to some high schoolers as well.) Virtually every talk utilizes the same title, namely, “You are an important part of something much bigger than yourselves.” And it works. Young people get a kick out of seeing our 1996 yearbook, with one quintessential word (“La Salle”) misspelled on the cover and on key pages within the book. They’re amused by the “cow in the dormitory” story of May 1968. They’re shown pictures of our three campuses before our arrival at 20th and Olney. They learn how we got the nickname “Explorers,” and what our coat-of-arms signifies, and why blue and gold are our colors. (Kinda wish someone had told me such things when I was a freshman at La Salle myself!)

I remind the students that they can change their major (most of them will!) or their address, or their future career. Some people even opt to change their name. But the one thing which they—and we—can never, ever change...is our roots. And for true Lasallians, who would want to?

Yes, archiving is indeed a job which will never end.

AN ENDURING LEGACY OF RELATIONSHIPS

MICHAEL BOYLE, '98, DOCTORAL CANDIDATE AT THE CENTRE OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY, AND A HAMBURG FELLOW IN CONFLICT PREVENTION AT THE CENTER FOR INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND COOPERATION (CISAC), STANFORD UNIVERSITY

IN THEIR 140 YEARS IN THE United States, the Christian Brothers have had an impact not just on the institutions in which they taught, but on generations of families that have benefited from their service. My family undoubtedly belongs in the category of those who have benefited enormously from their ties with Christian Brothers. While there are many graduates of La Salle and other Christian Brothers institutions in my family, it is my grandfather, who never had the opportunity to go to college, whose story best portrays what the Christian Brothers mean to me.

My grandfather, John McArdle, was born in 1899 in Philadelphia. He attended Cathedral Grade School in Center City, a small primary school at which girls were taught by an order of nuns and the boys by the Christian Brothers. Though he remained in school only until the age of 13, my grandfather was profoundly influenced by his experience there, and spoke fondly of the Brothers for the rest of his life. He would pepper his conversations with the phrase, "The Brothers in school used to tell us..." and remind his family of their lessons on the importance of education and charity. To my grandfather, these were not the lessons of an education long-forgotten, but guidelines for his life. Among the many relationships he developed with the Christian Brothers, one stands out for not only its impact on his life, but its longevity. In 1912, my grandfather met Brother Eugene, a newly minted Christian Brother who, at 18 years old, was only six years older than his pupils. Br. Eugene was his eighth grade teacher and, for the next 70 years of his life, his friend. They corresponded regularly, shared stories of their lives and families, and had a friendship that spanned nearly the course of their entire lives.

To me, this relationship exemplifies the best of what the Christian Brothers can be. While the Christian Brothers have a social mission—to encourage a value-based education and to train students for public and community service—their enduring legacy may lie just as much in the personal relationships that they have built with their students. That they have had such an impact on a family across generations is a testament to the power of the values they represent and their ability to realize those values in their daily relationships with others.

THE BEST POSSIBLE VERSIONS OF OURSELVES

MARIANNE SALMON GAUSS, '74, M.B.A. '87
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF MANAGEMENT

WHEN I HEARD THAT THE cover story for this edition of La Salle Magazine was about the Christian Brothers, so many faces came to mind.

In my first class, on a Wednesday morning in September of 1970, Brother Claude Demitras, F.S.C., '53, boomed a “Good morning,” and started to change my life. Br. Claude also was my academic adviser as I struggled my way through school. He taunted me when I had to drop out of day school and switch to night classes, saying that I would never finish. When I graduated, he took me and a classmate to dinner. During dinner, I asked why he had teased me, rather than support me. His answer was that he thought I was already feeling too sorry for myself, and that sympathy would have given me permission to fail. With maturity and self-knowledge, I would have to agree. I would have used sympathy as a crutch, but imagine his knowing that! Well, of course, that’s the secret. The Brothers care about the individual student. This caring attitude has spread to the faculty and staff of La Salle, as we strive to emulate the Brothers, and help them carry out their mission.

My most intense period of learning about the Brothers, St. John Baptist de La Salle, and the charism happened to me as a member of the Lasallian Leadership Institute (LLI). The Institute is a program divided into three years—spirituality, leadership, and management. Designed to help us learn the basic tenets of living a Lasallian life, the Institute introduced us to the writings of St. La Salle and others. We were given lectures by the best thinkers of the present day. Most importantly, we were introduced to colleagues from a wide variety of ministries, all sharing in the Lasallian charism. These colleagues gave empirical evidence that the Brothers have communicated who and what they are, clearly, if subtly, in each of these ministries. The speakers were also inspiring. Brother Malachy Broderick, F.S.C., told us a story on the nature of commitment; it is still amazingly poignant and memorable for me. Brother Miguel Campos, F.S.C., taught us that the Brothers believe their path to heaven is built by saving the souls of their students. What an incredible call to teach the whole student, so that the future adult can have a “whole, holistic, and holy” life.

The goals were many, including simply providing us with a community of like-minded educators with whom to share and from whom we could draw inspiration. However, the Brothers are confronting two challenging realities. Throughout the American Catholic Church, there are fewer and fewer people entering religious life. This is coupled with an ever-increasing need to help children, especially poor children, through education. There is excitement and hope when I think of the special opportunities that are being provided to inner-city children through the San Miguel School in Camden, N.J., and La Salle Academy in Philadelphia. The Brothers do not want to abandon the ministries in which they are already engaged, but these new ventures need leadership. Also, the Brothers are increasingly recognizing the level of commitment among the many lay and religious partners with whom they work. The LLI is a wonderful way to address all of these needs. So far, there are nine people here at the University who have finished the Lasallian Leadership Institute. Currently, six more members of the faculty and administration are participating.

I am luckier than many La Salle alums in that I have been able to continue to interact with the Brothers. As an adult, it is even clearer that there is a special brilliance here. So often, I see how these men work, day after day long into the night, to help our students find the best possible versions of themselves.

The Brothers who taught me were always men of quiet humility, passionate about teaching, but without ego. They taught me Lasallian values, long before there was a term for it, through their simple example. What is remarkable about the 60 or so individuals with whom I participated in LLI 2, is the commonality of qualities. These people are also passionate about teaching, caring for the whole student. They work hard, caring, praying, and nagging, to help the young people in their classrooms find a full and satisfying life.

So many Brothers have had an influence on me. Each one has special gifts to share, and I am richer for each Brother I've met. I am working by their side now, and their inspiration, faith, and support still mean everything to me.

WHAT A PRIVILEGE TO SHARE IN THAT WEALTH

BROTHER THOMAS MCPHILLIPS, F.S.C., PH.D., '72
PROFESSOR OF BIOLOGY

IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN THE RESULT of a careful re-reading of the De La Salle Brothers' Rule. Maybe it was a response to a nagging desire to be of greater service. Or maybe it was just the thought of experiencing an adventure. Whatever the reason, my decision to teach at Bethlehem University was one of the best of my life.

When I first set out for the Holy Land in 1994, I had little idea what I would find there. I certainly had an awareness that the place suffered from great political turmoil; however, I had no sense of what that might mean for the people I would be working with. One thing was clear though: No matter to whom I spoke, no matter what I read, I sensed that the Brothers and staff at Bethlehem University were making a significant difference to people who really needed them. Why wouldn't you want to be part of that?

Teaching biology to an all-Palestinian student body presented serious challenges to this dyed-in-the-wool Philadelphian. For the first time in my life, I was experiencing in a big way the meaning of "cultural differences." I quickly came to understand that, in Palestinian culture, almost everything is perceived to be negotiable. More importantly, however, I also promptly figured out how central family and friends were in the lives of these people who had little else.

Toward the end of my tenure in Bethlehem, I approached a group of students I had been teaching in a seminar. "You and your friends obviously have very little to spend on clothing and school materials. (Textbooks were so expensive as to be out of the question.) Yet, every day, I see piles of sweaters and notebooks around campus that are unattended for hours. Why is it that they are never stolen?" They looked at me as if I had two heads. "Brother, why would we steal from our friends?" Once more, these beautiful people illustrated to me that they might have been materially poor, but their spirits were rich beyond belief. What a privilege it was to share in that wealth.

Language presented a whole different kind of challenge. Imagine teaching the complexities of biology in English to a group of students, none of whom speak English as a first language. Early in my stint at Bethlehem University, I was teaching a class on the biochemistry of cellular respiration. Suddenly, these heretofore most respectful students erupted into animated conversation with each other. Had I completely lost my ability to control a class? Hardly. My rapid-fire delivery of the material simply overwhelmed those whose English skills were marginal. On some sort of cue that I never figured out, the better students took over and re-explained in Arabic to the rest what I had failed to communicate. Within 30 seconds, all settled down and I was back in charge—this time, speaking more slowly and using simpler vocabulary. I learned to welcome these interruptions, for it was then that true learning occurred.

As I try to put my own fast-paced, chaotic world into some sort of perspective, I often think back to the students at Bethlehem University, with their simple lifestyles and their focus on family and friends. I am confident that these students have taught me more than I taught them. So, in their honor, I take every opportunity to share those priceless lessons with my students at La Salle.

A WORLDWIDE EDUCATIONAL MISSION

BROTHER FRANCIS TRI NGUYEN, F.S.C., PH.D.

DIRECTOR OF THE SOCIOLOGY PROGRAM, NATIVE OF VIETNAM

SINCE MY ARRIVAL IN AMERICA in 1975 as a refugee from Communist Vietnam, I have refocused my energies and adapted myself to new surroundings. This necessitates much reflection, detachment, and patience: neither complete inaction nor insurance against all risks, but rather a search for new ways to live my Lasallian vocation in a new sociocultural environment. I may thus continue to live for God and do His will with whatever talents and ministry circumstances He has entrusted to me. My bi-directional adaptation to American culture has engaged me, not in assimilation nor integration, but synthesis, blending the best of the East and the West.

I had been a La Salle Christian Brother in Vietnam for 20 years. I had taught either in French or in Vietnamese at the Brothers schools in Vietnam, and in Cambodia at the secondary and college levels. The Confucian tradition in Vietnamese society had elevated the teacher's social status to a rank above that of the parents'. Thus, thanks to my teacher status and also to the black robe I was wearing, I gained "automatic" respect and authority in the classroom. Over the years, I've had the privilege of meeting Asian Brothers from Hong Kong, Japan, Thailand, the Philippines, India, Sri Lanka, Malaysia, and Singapore. Unlike the latter countries, the socio-political environment in war-torn Vietnam had brought constraints and tensions in the educational sphere in general, and in the Brothers schools in particular. I am therefore thankful to the Divine Providence for the blessings of liberty and peace in America.

I was appointed assistant professor at La Salle University in 1987, promoted to associate professor in 1993, and conferred tenure in 1994. I have been director of the sociology program since 1995.

My educational ministry at La Salle University has brought both challenges and rewards. Students' written evaluations at the end of each semester prevented me from becoming complacent and uncritical: I have learned to relate to students in a more egalitarian and respectful manner, and to shift from the teaching to the learning paradigm. At the same time, I have been blessed unexpectedly with many students' kindness, trust, and friendship. Many have confided in me, asked me to write letters of recommendation for graduate schools, law schools, medical schools, and even a Navy School for Officers. I have been invited to their weddings and to their homes to celebrate Thanksgiving, Christmas, and Easter with their families. Moreover, colleagues from the schools of Arts and Sciences, Business, and Nursing have heartened and sustained me with their support and friendship over all these years. It has been particularly gratifying to receive the following note from the director of graduate psychology on Dec. 12, 2003: "Dear Br. Tri, I want to express my appreciation for the excellent responses the students gave to your teaching. It is good to see that students value the enthusiasm and the preparation you brought to this course. Students are coming to recognize the importance of preparing to work with a diverse group of clients."

Students seem to appreciate the international flavor I bring. Currently, I am conducting research on the identity of Lasallian universities in the 21st century, thereby giving the students a glance into the 65 Lasallian colleges and universities and into the Lasallian community worldwide, which is composed of 6,000 Brothers and 73,000 lay colleagues collaborating in the shared educational mission of touching the minds and hearts of 900,000 students in 80 countries.

THROUGH TRAGEDY, A VOCATION

IT'S HOW YOU RESPOND TO SETBACKS THAT helps you find out what direction you'll take in life.

This was the case for Mary Brownsberger, who is pursuing a doctoral degree in psychology at La Salle University. Her stepson was in a car accident that left him disabled. But out of that tragedy came a positive: "It opened the door to what I really wanted to do with my life," she said. Her goal is to be actively involved in the empowering of those with disabilities. She is concentrating her degree in rehabilitation and neuropsychology.

One of Brownsberger's many volunteer activities is with Special Equestrians, a therapeutic riding facility in Warrington, Pa. The program uses horses to facilitate therapeutic activity for people with disabilities.

Brownsberger said, "What I enjoy the most is being at the barn and interacting with the instructors, students, and horses. The students have diverse disabilities. I've worked with children with autism, adults who are blind and/or deaf, teens with cerebral palsy, and adults who have suffered brain injury."

"In 30 minutes, a person's physical and emotional state can become totally transformed," she said. "The students are amazing. I've seen some who were really acting out before their lesson started, even self-harming. But most of the time, as soon as they're on the horse, a transformation occurs. Their attention shifts, and they're able to have a good, productive lesson. Most don't want the lesson to end after 30 minutes!"

Brownsberger recently received the Bob Eigenbrode Memorial Award, given by the Pennsylvania Psychological Association to a graduate psychology student. Among the criteria for the award are "potential for service to the field and involvement in activities."

"Even though she is being educated to be a professional psychologist, her desire to reach out to those in true need really sets her apart," said Frank Gardner, Ph.D., Director of La Salle's Psy.D. Program, who encouraged Brownsberger to apply for the award.

The Psy.D. Program at La Salle is incredibly challenging, yet Brownsberger maintains a 3.98 grade point average. Gardner said, "She works really hard and is involved in so many things. She's a true picture of compassion, motivation, and energy."

In addition to teaching an undergraduate course in psychology at La Salle, Brownsberger is a member of two honor societies, has been elected as student representative to speak for her fellow doctoral students, and is a member of the Student Affiliates of American Psychology.

With all of these experiences and activities under her belt, Brownsberger doesn't show any signs of stopping. She hopes to teach people interested in rehabilitation careers. And she plans to keep following her goal: "To empower the disabled and their families to be as healthy and self-sufficient as possible."

These days, it is hard to find a good, clear representation of the Italian-American situation of the past century. We are bombarded today by the typical “mafia/gangster” stereotype of Italian men and, thus, it seems like all Italian men of the 20th century exhibited this ultimate lack of respect for human life and integrity. However, in Cianci’s simple and genuine autobiography, which tells the story of his early days on the street and his gradual emergence from destitution, we get a different look at this group and the men who define its existence. We are presented with a man, who, through his experiences and his interactions with others, brings back the long-lost dignity and integrity of the represented Italian-American persona and its way of life. (Excerpted from a review on amazon.com.)

Nicholas Cianci, '58, grew up in the streets of South Philadelphia during the Depression. He attended public schools in Philadelphia before serving in the Army during the Korean War. He attended La Salle on the G.I. Bill and received his degree in education and English. He has worked as an English teacher, a guidance counselor, assistant principal, and principal in both junior and senior high schools. Now retired, he lives in Southport, N.C.

Vic tries not to let these re-occurrences bother him, but they take their toll on what could be a very successful writing career. He does his best to keep the latest “terrors” from his wife, Molly, and his two sons, Spence and Mark. All is well until he feels the need to travel to the “Wall.” This could be his last trip anywhere, as he discovers that he has brought something back from the war with him that has been inside of him for more than 20 years. As his life may be slowly slipping away, he discovers the foreign substance that he has been harboring for many years. As Vic lays in his hospital bed, only he knows whether he will survive or not. (from bookmanmarketing.com)

Conversations with Isabel Allende

Edited by John Rodden, '78
Foreword by Isabel Allende

University of Texas Press, 2004 (revised edition)
304 pp., $29.95

Allende seems to get more and more popular all over the world. That’s a good reason for libraries with active fiction collections—specifically, whose copies of Allende’s books rarely sit idle on the shelves—to invest in this collection of 34 interviews Allende has given in the 1980s and 1990s, some not previously published, others published in languages other than English. Allende isn’t a reticent interviewee; she has lots to say, and frequent topics in these interviews include Latin American politics, feminism, her family history, the difference between writing novels and short stories, and her deceased daughter, Paula (subject of one of her most recent and certainly most poignant books, Paula, 1995). Her responses to similar questions by different interviewers do not always add up to a consistent picture of events in her life, but that’s just fine; what fiction writer doesn’t embroider and manipulate the truth, even about himself or herself, for the narrative needs of the moment? Her fans will love the Isabel who comes across so well spoken here. (from Booklist)

Since graduating from La Salle, John Rodden, '78, has taught at the University of Virginia and the University of Texas at Austin. He is the author and editor of eight books, including Performing the Literary Interview, Lionel Trilling and the Critics, and The Worlds of Irving Howe. He lives in Austin, Texas.

TOPIX was a comic book published for Catholic school students in the 1940s, which included a feature about St. John Baptist de La Salle's mission to educate underprivileged children (above) and the story of how Joe Verdeur, '50, overcame his fear of water to later go on to become an Olympic Gold Medal winner.

Two of the most prominent recipients of the La Salle Collegian Award, presented for public service in the communication field, were Walter Cronkite, who received the award in 1960, and David Brinkley, who was honored in 1961. La Salle hosted two of America's favorite comedians in the early days of their careers. Bill Cosby (left) appeared at La Salle in 1965. At the time, students paid 25 cents for admission to Cosby's stand-up performance. The current host of "The Tonight Show," Jay Leno (right), entertained at La Salle in 1983.

If you knew Brother Patrick Ellis, chances are that you have heard the cow story at one time or another. It's even more than once. For those who have not heard this story before and miss hearing it, read on...

May 31, 1968.

"It happened during the fall semester of 1968. Brother Bubenick, class of '69, 'the cow' was the Wister Farm." At the time, this was a difficult task. Not only was the Wister Farm off campus, but the La Salle students (today, this is the area between the Peale House, Japanese Tea House, and the old dorm building.)

It's not uncommon for students to keep goldfish or a hamster in their dorm rooms, but during the early morning hours of May 31, 1968, the residents of St. Bernard Hall awoke to the sound of stamping feet and mooing. As part of a prank, a cow had been led from Wister Farm, up 20th Street, and into the dorm. According to former President Brother Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., getting the cow OUT proved to be more difficult than getting it into the building.

College students have a reputation for engaging in some bizarre activities. Among those that have occurred at La Salle include the publicity photo featuring La Salle's gymnasts creating a "human pyramid" (above, c. 1901). Alum Establishes Philadelphia's First Sports Hall of Fame

BY JON CAROULIS

AFTER TWO YEARS OF PLANNING, THOUSANDS of hours of work, and hundreds of phone calls, Ken Avallon, '83, just 48 hours before the event, was trying to figure out where 270 people would be seated.

Avallon felt as though he was planning a wedding, but in February, he saw a dream come true when his idea, a Philadelphia Sports Hall of Fame, inducted its first class.

"I felt like a bride," said Avallon, President of the hall. Two days before the ceremony to induct its first 19 members, he and the hall's vice president were working on a seating chart.

Philadelphia Mayor John F. Street was at the induction, and so was Pennsylvania Governor Edward G. Rendell. Some of Philadelphia's greatest sports figures were there, too. La Salle basketball legend Tom Gola, '55, was among the initial 19 figures inducted, but is recovering from a stroke and was unable to attend.

Avallon, who works as a technology consultant, got the idea for the institution when he read a May 2002 newspaper story, lamenting how Philadelphia didn't have a sports hall of fame.

"I did some research and couldn't track down anything," Avallon said. "There was [no sports hall of fame] that I could find. I spent the better part of three or four days talking to friends, my brother, and dad, and I put a plan in place to see what I could come up with."

The hall became a family project of sorts. Avallon's brother, Alex, '81, and father, Alexander, '54, were involved until his father's health prevented him from working on the project. Alex is the hall's treasurer.

Once the hall was established with a constitution, bylaws, and federal 501(c)(3) status, the group began assembling the first class of sports figures. (In addition to athletes, coaches and managers are eligible.) Initially, 35 people were nominated for the hall's charter class; then, 48 Philadelphia-area sports figures—including sportswriters, broadcasters, athletic directors, coaches, and athletes—voted to choose the first class of 19 to be inducted.

On Feb. 9, at a Philadelphia hotel, Avallon saw his work come to fruition.

One of the highlights for him, he said, was presenting a Legacy of Excellence Award to Philadelphia Phillies broadcaster Harry Kalas. "Many of the athletes and figures inducted played before I was born," Avallon said. "But I've grown up listening to Kalas, and it was nice to see him there."

One other person Avallon would have loved to see at the event was Gola.

"My father was at La Salle when the school won the NCAA championship," Avallon said. "I met Gola a number of different times when I was a kid. Dad knew him pretty well, and I met him when he was coaching in 1969. We were living in Pittsburgh, and Dad took us to a basketball game between La Salle and Duquesne (when Gola was coach). Once we moved back to Philly, we went to his house to visit him a few times. It really would have been nice to be able to shake his hand, and ask if he remembered me."

Making Healthcare a Family Affair

BY KAREN TONER, '04

IT MAY APPEAR ODD TO ANYONE OUTSIDE the Burgoyne family that attorney Paul J. Burgoyne, '70, serves as Chair of La Salle University's Nursing Advisory Board, a predominately female group.

To his family members, Burgoyne's serving on the nursing board is normal. Nurses surround this Cherry Hill, N.J., resident, whose wife, sister, brother, and sister-in-law are members of the profession. His daughter Madelyn is a third-year nursing student at La Salle.

Burgoyne wanted Madelyn to enroll at La Salle three years ago. "The nursing staff assists students in the classroom and in clinical settings," he said. "This sort of attention is important in all fields, but even more so in nursing.

"La Salle's School of Nursing has been an ongoing contribution to the University, the surrounding community, and the city of Philadelphia," Burgoyne said.

The University's Nursing Advisory Board—made up of alumni, community leaders, healthcare directors, and other academics—meets five times a year to increase awareness of the School of Nursing and to ensure it addresses the needs of students in healthcare. Burgoyne has served on the board for five years. His sister-in-law, Janice Beitz, R.N., Ph.D., '83, La Salle Associate Professor of Nursing and Co-Director of the Wound, Ostomy, Continence Nursing Education Program, said, "He graciously agreed to chair the board despite a brutally busy schedule. Even though he is a lawyer, he is also committed to the idea of quality healthcare and quality healthcare education. I believe this is due to his being married to my sister, Margaret, who is a certified registered nurse anesthetist."

"Paul has always wanted to serve La Salle. It's unusual in that he's not in any of the fields the School of Nursing teaches—nursing, speech-language-hearing science, or nutrition—and the field is predominately female. But he's very moral, very principled; so I asked him to join the board. He's been a very good chair," said Zane Wolf, R.N., Ph.D., Dean of the School of Nursing.

Paul and Madelyn are not the only Burgoynes connected to La Salle: 15 relatives including brothers, cousins, in-laws, and his father, who graduated in 1933, are all La Salle alumni.

For 22 years, Burgoyne has worked on the Pennsylvania Supreme Court's Attorney Disciplinary Board, investigating complaints against lawyers. Prior to that, he was a criminal defense lawyer in Philadelphia. He received his bachelor's degree in political science at La Salle and later graduated from Rutgers University School of Law.

Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Unanimously Elected to Second Term as La Salle's President

Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, was unanimously elected to a second five-year term as President of La Salle University by the school's Board of Trustees. Br. Michael, a former professor at La Salle, became the University's 28th President on July 1, 1999.

"I'm very proud of what we've accomplished in the past five years, and very excited about meeting the challenges that face us," Br. Michael said. "On a personal note, it's great to see so many wonderful things happening at my alma mater." His second term will begin on July 1, 2004.

"The Board of Trustees displayed an overwhelming show of support for Br. Michael's leadership," said James J. Lynch, '71, Chair of La Salle's Board of Trustees. "After a formal review process that concluded with a remarkable consensus, the Committee on Trusteeship strongly recommended reelecting Br. Michael, and the entire Board of Trustees voted unanimously to reelect him to another term. We feel very confident that Br. Michael is providing the direction the University needs."

Giving to the University has increased dramatically during Br. Michael's tenure as President. Total gifts and grants made annually to the University from fiscal year 1999 to the end of fiscal year 2003 grew 33 percent with unrestricted annual giving growing by 23.4 percent. In addition, during that time, 12 alumni clubs or chapters have either been revived or launched.

Under Br. Michael's direction, a strategic plan was developed and continues to be implemented. The plan focuses on five themes: enhancing the intellectual and spiritual life of the University; communicating La Salle's distinct identity; investing in the future; enhancing the quality of life in the University's neighborhood; and strengthening partnerships with alumni.

Several dignitaries and distinguished alumni participated in an official groundbreaking ceremony for La Salle's new student housing and dining facility on south campus in March. Those digging in included (from left) Mayor of Philadelphia, John F. Street; James J. Lynch, '71, Chair of La Salle's Board of Trustees, and Chair and C.E.O. of Sovereign Bank MidAtlantic; City Councilwoman Donna Reed Miller; and Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, President of La Salle.

Ground is Broken for New $26 Million Residence Hall and Dining Facility

La Salle University held a ceremonial groundbreaking for the construction of its new $26 million residence hall and dining facility. The hall will house more than 430 students and is expected to be completed in June 2005.

With increasing demand for on-campus housing, University officials have decided to add new facilities. When the new hall is completed, all resident students will live in University-owned housing.

Since 1998, the University has leased units from the Ogontz Manor Apartments at Ogontz and Olney avenues to accommodate the demand for on-campus housing. University officials only wanted this to be a temporary solution for the enrollment surge.

"The high water mark was the fall of 2002. We had 2,143 students living in University housing. That's 65 percent of all full-time day undergraduates and 81 percent of the freshman class," said Raymond Ricci, '67, La Salle's Vice President for Enrollment Services. "We purposely reduced the size of the freshman class in 2003 because of housing limits."

The 102,921-square-foot residence hall will be a three-story complex consisting of a central entrance with four wings containing rooms. Three wings will feature suites of two bedrooms for four students with a connected bath. The fourth wing will feature double occupancy rooms with communal bath facilities. It will also have lounges and study rooms for student use.

It will be located on the school's south campus, a largely undeveloped area, and is the first new residence hall constructed since 1989.

The dining hall will seat 300 and can accommodate up to 700 meals per day. It will feature a design that allows for meals cooked-to-order for each person. There will also be a convenience store and a community mailroom in the dining hall.

Construction will be done by Nason and Cullen, Inc., of King of Prussia and Philadelphia-based Artis T. Ore, Inc., who teamed up to form a joint venture and were the successful bidders on the project.

Alumni Hand Out Highest Honors

Stars illuminated the Union Ballroom at La Salle University's Alumni Association Awards on Nov. 14, 2003. Anthony Cardinal Bevilacqua, Archbishop Emeritus of Philadelphia, and Elmer F. "Bud" Hansen Jr., '58, President and C.E.O. of Hansen Properties, Inc., were honored with the night's two major awards. Cardinal Bevilacqua received the Signum Fidei Medal, which derives its name from the motto of the Christian Brothers, "Sign of Faith." The award is given annually to an individual who makes noteworthy contributions to the advancement of humanitarian principles in keeping with the Christian/Judeo tradition. Hansen was honored with the John J. Finley, '24, Award, given to recognize alumni who have exhibited outstanding service to La Salle or the Alumni Association. The award's namesake was known as "Mr. La Salle" for his devotion to the University.

New Athletics Logo Makes Its Debut

After 10 months in the making, La Salle University's new athletics logo was enthusiastically received at its unveiling on Feb. 25 at the Explorer Men's Basketball game against Temple.

According to Peter D'Orazio, '81, Assistant Athletics Director for Advancement at La Salle and the Athletics Department's point person managing the creation of the new mark, the new logo captures a piece of the past while at the same time pushes La Salle forward.

The new logo depicts the profile of a 17th century French explorer looking through a telescope with the words, "La Salle Explorers," below. The University's colors of dark blue and gold are used.

"The new athletics logo combines the historical icon of the explorer along with a modern image for the department," D'Orazio said. "Since the unveiling, we have received nothing but positive feedback from alumni and Explorer Club members."

The extensive research to create the new logo included gathering input from coaches and staff, and other segments of the University community.

"The process was very detailed, but it was necessary to review all samples and revisions with a wide variety of personnel to ensure that the new mark would be widely accepted," D'Orazio said.

Sounds of the Ocean

La Salle junior Justin R. Morace, a Digital Arts and Multimedia Design (DArt) major, won first place in La Salle's fourth annual Digital Art Competition for his original work, "Sounds of the Ocean" (shown above). He created the piece, which displays a conch shell protruding from a human ear, for a "Sound Project" in his Electronic Visual Communication class, taught by Sandra Camomile. In it, he attempts to illustrate the sound of water. Since all entries for the contest had to be created through digital techniques, Morace had someone take a digital photo of his ear and then digitally superimposed a conch shell over it.

African American Alumni Association Awards Bestowed

This year's Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Award was presented at the African American Alumni Association Dinner held on Nov. 7, 2003. Dr. Smith was one of the first African Americans to graduate from La Salle's pre-med program. He served as La Salle's psychiatrist for 15 years. The award is presented each year to an African American who has achieved success in his or her profession, has demonstrated a commitment to traditional Lasallian values, has made significant contributions to the community, and serves as an outstanding example to all La Salle students. In addition to Wyatt, Lasella Hall, '06, received the 2003 Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Scholarship, established to support full-time African American students who meet academic requirements, make significant contributions to the community, and serve as an example to all La Salle students. Louise Jackson Billups, '83, was also honored with the Presidential Award in recognition of her outstanding service to the African American Alumni Association.

Leon Ellerson, '56, Computer Software Pioneer, Receives Leadership Award

Leon Ellerson, '56, President of Keystone Computer Associates, is the recipient of La Salle University's 12th annual Leadership Award, presented at the University's Charter Dinner this March.

The award honors individuals who have demonstrated outstanding leadership in corporate, civic, governmental, and religious affairs.

Ellerson says giving back to La Salle is quite simple.

"My admission to La Salle happened to occur at a critical time in my life when another university had closed its doors to me," he said. "It is also worth nothing that La Salle had welcomed me in the 1950s, during an era when attitudes toward people of color were a lot different than what they are today. In addition to its stellar academics, I might add that La Salle's track record has also been enlightened by its traditional, eminently worthy philosophy of helping those less advantaged by circumstance."

Ellerson is a member of the University's Board of Trustees and a founding partner of Keystone Computer Associates, a Fort Washington, Pa., firm at the forefront of computer software development since its 1965 inception. He has been the firm's president since 1975.

In addition to the Leadership Award, Ellerson has received the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Award from La Salle's African American Alumni Association for his professional achievements, and the University's John J. Finley, '24, Award for his outstanding contributions to the La Salle community.

The Charter Dinner commemorates the founding of La Salle as an institution of higher learning when it was incorporated in 1863. Money raised at the black-tie event goes toward student scholarships.

The 12th annual Charter Dinner/La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony was celebrated at Normandy Farm in Blue Bell, Pa., on March 20. Longtime La Salle supporter and University Trustee Leon Ellerson, '56, was presented with the Leadership Award in front of 340 of Ellerson's and La Salle's friends, corporate partners, and alumni. Proceeds from the annual Charter Dinner enhance the University's Scholarship Fund, thereby benefiting future generations of La Salle students. This year's Charter Dinner raised over $230,000 for students. This is the first year that the Charter Dinner was held at Normandy Farm. Elmer F. 'Bud' Hansen Jr., '58, and Elmer F. 'Bud' Hansen III, '90, M.B.A. '96, hosted the event. The Leo Niessen Jr. Charitable Foundation and its trustee, William R. Sasso, Esq., '69, also a member of La Salle University's Board of Trustees, were the presenting sponsors. ESL Certification: La Salle at the Forefront

Beginning September 2004, the state of Pennsylvania will require educators teaching English as a Second Language (ESL) in public schools to be specifically certified in that content area. La Salle's Bilingual/Bicultural program understands the need for a specialized curriculum regarding this topic and is now an approved provider for ESL certification in Pennsylvania.

Luis Gomez, Ph.D., Director of La Salle's Bilingual/Bicultural program, says teaching English as a Second Language requires well-defined and unique skills because the teacher is dealing with a multitude of cultures and languages in one classroom.

"Teachers must be able to deliver the material in a way that is comprehensible to all cultures," Gomez said. "They must also be aware of the different cultures in their classes and be able to rise to a certain level of cultural sensitivity."

The ESL certification program consists of five predetermined courses that will address in depth the areas of expertise that are required by the Pennsylvania Department of Education. These areas include: English usage and the development of linguistic awareness; support services for English language learners; English as a Second Language approaches, methods, and techniques; and cultural awareness and sensitivity.

"Dynamics of cross-cultural communication is a key element to the coursework," Gomez said. "All cultures are different, and ESL teachers must be able to clarify these nuances and use them in their pedagogical approach to the classroom."

Keyes' View of Current Events at Economic Outlook 2004

Political commentator and Ambassador Alan Keyes shared his views on current events as the guest speaker at the La Salle School of Business' Economic Outlook 2004, held Jan. 27, at The Union League of Philadelphia.

Over 450 alumni and friends of the University attended Keyes' discussion of the election year, the health of the world economy, and the United States' impact on worldwide issues, including the War on Iraq. The School of Business is a host of this event with the Business Network at The Union League of Philadelphia and Thomson Financial.

In 1983, President Ronald Reagan appointed Keyes to the United Nations Economic and Social Council. He is a former presidential candidate and frequent commentator on national radio and television programs.

Business On Campus—Now in its 12th year, the Executive On Campus Program (EOC), sponsored by the School of Business Advisory Board, brought together over 60 business professionals, mostly La Salle alumni, to speak to undergraduate classes about career paths, industry highlights, and current business trends.

Bob Truitt, Business Advisory Board member and President of the Beverage Can Division of Crown Cork & Seal Co. Inc., addresses students in a Business Perspectives (BUS 100) class.

The School of Business held Economic Outlook 2004 featuring Ambassador Alan Keyes, former Presidential Candidate and Ambassador to the United Nations Economic and Social Council. This annual event, co-sponsored by The Union League of Philadelphia, was completely sold out with over 450 attendees, including alumni and business leaders from the tri-state area. Economic Outlook 2005 will be held next January.

Retired Faculty, Staff Gather to Remember

More than 30 retired faculty and staff members held the first (of what they hope will be many) reunion luncheon at the Lulu Country Club near Glenside, Pa., in November.

The event was organized by Charles Halpin, '44, formerly a faculty member of the Management Department, and Thomas McCarthy, Emeritus Professor of Psychology and former Vice President of Student Affairs.

Guest of honor at the function was 90-year-old "Pete the Barber" Paranzino, who has cut the hair of many faculty and staff members since he became La Salle's resident barber in 1939.

Back-slapping was the order of the day; many of the guests had not seen each other in years.

There were few speeches—which was deliberate. But Halpin did offer one observation. Addressing the group, he said that when they worked at La Salle, the University was much smaller, and that allowed for faculty to become more acquainted with one another, both professionally and personally.

Everyone had such a good time that Halpin and McCarthy plan to make it an annual event, on the second Wednesday of November, and they hope more retired faculty and staff can attend next year.

TORPEY DRIVEN TO BUILD NATIONAL RECOGNITION FOR RUNNERS

BY MICHAEL ECHAN, '04

WHEN YOU THINK OF COLLEGIATE POWER-houses, certain programs come to mind. Duke basketball, Michigan football, and Miami baseball all certainly qualify as the dominant schools in each sport.

Although La Salle University cross country and track may have never won a national championship, let alone the four that Duke has won, to be mentioned among the likes of those programs is exactly where Coach Charles Torpey is trying to take the program. A modest start though it may be, the recent national rankings in cross country have established a new benchmark for the program and are the starting block from which the talented mentor of La Salle athletes can launch such a drive.

Since arriving at La Salle in the mid-90s from Springbrook High School in Silver Spring, Md., Torpey has taken a program that was merely competitive and molded it into a program that has produced two All-Americans (Brian Gallagher, '98, and Theresa Carroll, '98) and 10 Academic All-Americans, the most recent winners being current seniors Todd Witzleben and Jenna Darcy.

Torpey has led his team to six A-10 titles, the most recent coming this past fall as the La Salle men's team won its third straight A-10 championship. He also received his sixth Coach of the Year honor this fall for his teams' success. He attributes all this success to one ideal: Never be satisfied.

"It's never enough; despite a lot of the things they've attained, they still aren't happy with it," he said. "We have a lot of goals and objectives here, and we haven't attained a bunch of them. We don't want to be just one of the best teams in the A-10, we want to be the best team in the A-10. We want to be one of the best teams in the East; we want to be a national type of team."

Most outsiders might think that such success would have spoiled him or softened his approach, when, in actuality, success like this is old news to him.

Before his days as a high school coach (he led the Springbrook boy's team to the Maryland 4A state title in 1992), Torpey was the head coach at the University of Maryland during most of the 1980s, a time when the Terrapins had one of the most dominant programs in the entire eastern United States. It seems as if that is Torpey's M.O.: arrive at a school and quickly turn it into a dominating, award-winning machine.

Torpey is also known for something that cannot be reflected in place-standings, stop-watches, or national rankings. He continues his dealings—his relationships—with his runners beyond the athletic arena and beyond college life. To him, it is only part of the process.

"I still talk to a lot of them (former runners). It's my own thing; it's always been a lifetime commitment. It's not just four years and you're out or five years and you're out. There's more to it than that. Most people aren't going to attain their physical or mental capabilities in four or five years; it's impossible," he said.

This kinship with former athletes is not exclusive to those he has mentored either. The coach has nurtured great relationships, and holds in high regard, program alumni that predate his leadership, such as Explorer Olympian and current Naval Academy cross country coach Al Cantello, '55, and others. He was able to nurture those relationships even further last season when the Athletics Department invited the three La Salle Olympians (Cantello, Ira Davis, '58, and John Uelses, '65) back to campus to be honored during festivities at a men's basketball game.

Whether a runner is as talented as senior Sheila Klick or a relative newcomer who might not win award after award, he still takes the same approach with each of them.

Torpey derives great satisfaction from helping his student-athletes in attaining their own personal goals, whether it be running a four-minute mile or a six-minute mile.

His life, though, doesn't stop at the Wetzler Track or in his office under McCarthy Stadium. He is a dedicated family man, with his wife Janice and three children: Christopher, Brian, and Jenna. He can also be seen around campus with Director of Campus Recreation Ed Lawless. In fact, it is rare that you ever see them apart.

"Torp and I are best buddies, and we rarely talk (about) work," Lawless said.

"It seems that everything we see, we think the same on.

"I like hanging around him and his team because of the energy and the passion. He's just so uplifting to be around."

It is rare to see such dedication to something that does not receive the attention or publicity as some of its counterparts. Basketball gets all the glitz; football garners all the glory, and baseball wraps itself in nostalgia. But Torpey exemplifies selfless dedication not only to his sport, but to his school and to his student-athletes. He has taken a small sport, at a small Catholic university in Northwest Philadelphia, and turned it into a program that annually sends representatives to NCAA championship meets. All this without a massive school or the booster program funding that usually comes with a larger-scale program. And all of this happened, surprisingly enough, improbably enough, under the watch of one person—one uniquely talented and dedicated coach.

BY KALE BEERS, '95

It was 50 years ago when a plane from Kansas City, Mo., touched down at Philadelphia's airport and taxied up to a heaving throng of people awaiting the arrival of the passengers inside.

That date was March 21, and the day before, those passengers—the La Salle men's basketball team—had conquered the world. Led by All-American and National Player of the Year Tom Gola, '55, the 1954 Explorers routed Bradley University 90-76 to seal their championship run at Kansas City's Municipal Auditorium. That date was March 20, 1954.

Almost 50 years to the day, the planes, cars, and trains once again arrived in Philadelphia; this time, they came from all directions, and they carried those same passengers back to 20th and Olney for a reunion of La Salle's champions. Some made the trek from as far as Fort Myers, Fla., (Manny Gomez, '56) others were as close as Abington, Pa., (Charles Greenberg, '56). In total, 10 teammates and their family members were represented for the weekend of festivities that celebrated one of Philadelphia's greatest sports feats and certainly the University's top team athletic accomplishment.

The players and their families were treated to a private reception at The Union League of Philadelphia on Friday night as well as an open reception at La Salle's Blue and Gold Commons dining facility on Saturday before the current Explorers tipped off against George Washington. At half-time of the game, the players or representatives were presented ceremonial plaques and received a standing ovation during the stirring presentation.

A half-century later, La Salle remembers its champions.

Coach Billy Hahn spoke to members, representatives, and guests of the 1954 championship team at the private reception.

Touchton, '74, Receives Long-Overdue Peace-Time Medal Recognition

On December 2, 2003, during a small ceremony near Atlanta, Ga., John E. Touchton Sr., Ph.D., '74, received four medals he earned over 20 years ago during his service in the First Cavalry Division of the United States Army.

John E. Touchton Sr., Ph.D., '74, (right) is congratulated by Congressman Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.).

"I didn't go into the Army to get medals. I just wanted to do a good job," said Touchton.

He did a good enough job to earn him an Army Achievement Medal (AAM), a Meritorious Service Medal (MSM), and two Army Commendation Medals (ARCOMs), one of which is being reviewed for a possible upgrade to the Soldier's Medal.

It wasn't until the fall of 2002, when Touchton met then-Congressman Saxby Chambliss (R-Ga.), who was running for Senate in Georgia, that it even seemed possible he would ever receive the medals he earned.

Dr. Touchton provided Senator Chambliss' team with the necessary documentation, and they went to work. It took eight months to get the medals approved; but in August 2003, it became official that Touchton would receive his long overdue awards.

Currently, Touchton has received the AAM for his work at Fort Benning in Research and Development on the Sniper Rifle Project and the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle Project; and the MSM which is the Peace-Time Equivalent of a Bronze Star, for his two years as the Commanding Officer of the last active duty Horse Cavalry Unit left in the U.S. Army.

Dr. Touchton earned his first ARCOM for saving a man's right arm at the Atlanta Forrest Festival held in Atlanta, Texas, in 1981. During an arm wrestling contest, one of the contestant's arms snapped, severing the brachial artery. Touchton's quick response to stabilize the man not only saved the victim's arm, but also his life.

His second ARCOM nomination is currently under review to be upgraded to the prestigious honor of the Soldier's Medal which is the Peace-Time Equivalent of the Congressional Medal of Honor. It is awarded when a soldier risks his life in order to save the lives of others. In May 1981, Touchton, at great personal risk, and with total disregard for his own safety, entered an overturned horse trailer filled with eight 1,200-pound horses. The trailer had slid off a muddy road into a ditch knocking all the horses off their feet. He managed to coordinate and execute the evacuation of all horses and personnel from the trailer with only minimal injuries to all. His quick response and calm command of the situation saved many lives that day.

Touchton was honored to receive the medals bestowed upon him in December. He is still waiting for the decision of the Army Awards and Decoration Board for his Soldier's Medal.

For Tim Munson, '80, Perseverance Leads to Personal and Professional Success

Tim Munson, '80, has an ace up his sleeve when he talks to young people at schools about their futures. Yes, he's a special agent in charge of the FBI's Mobile, Ala., office. Yes, he worked full-time as a police officer while earning his degree at La Salle's evening division. Yes, he has persevered. But more importantly, he has prevailed.

Tim Munson, '80

Munson never knew his father and was placed in foster care as a child. For years, he never saw his mom or his siblings. He was literally passed from foster home to foster home. One was so bad, he had to run away.

Then two things happened for his benefit.

An older brother wanted him to assist in a crime. Munson was so nervous, he was shaking, but decided not to take that fork in the road. The other moment is when a college professor took him in as a ward and showed somebody cared. Then, he came home from high school to find this professor dead of natural causes. He was back in foster homes—and he dropped out of high school.

Munson joined the Army and saw a tour of duty in Vietnam. Upon returning, he married and began a family. Looking for some stability, he joined the Philadelphia Police Department. In the 1970s, he joined a number of Philadelphia residents who took advantage of the GI Bill to pursue college. (Munson had earned a GED by this time.)

"That was a Godsend," says Munson, who attended La Salle's evening division. "I would never have been able to be in the position where I am today if not for that."

He walked a police beat during the day and took classes at night for six years with many other officers who were attending the evening school.

He graduated with a degree in criminal justice, and a few years later, he joined the FBI, working his way up the ranks to his current position; he oversees more than 100 officers and civilians.

Munson gets requests from schools to speak with students about his experiences—about overcoming obstacles and making a contribution.

His message is simple: "If I could make it, you can make it, too."

Did You Know...

Christmas 1873: The oldest-known La Salle faculty photograph.

- About 5,700 Christian Brothers, together with their 75,000 colleagues, operate just over 1,000 Lasallian schools in 80 countries, serving the educational needs of 913,000 students worldwide.
 - The United States is one of the few places in the world where the Brothers are commonly known as the Christian Brothers. They are known in most nations as the De La Salle Brothers.
 - The Christian Brothers first came to Philadelphia in 1853 to teach in the grammar schools of St. Peter's and Assumption parishes.
 - Though further research is needed, many believe that a Christian Brother (Brother Jasper) originated baseball's seventh inning stretch in New York in 1882. The sports nickname of Manhattan College, a fellow Lasallian institution—"the Jaspers"—is a salute to his interest in athletics there.
 - Christian Brothers founder, Saint John Baptist de La Salle, was not related to the French explorer of the same surname (Robert Cavalier, Sieur de La Salle) who claimed the Mississippi River for France. However, another French explorer, Father Marquette, was a cousin of St. La Salle.
- The abbreviation F.S.C., which follows every Christian Brother's name, stands for "Fratres Scholarum Christianarum" (Brothers of the Christian Schools).
 - The world headquarters or "Generalate" of the Christian Brothers is located in Rome.

Relationships, Community, Involvement, Learning

JOSEPH J. CICALA, PH.D., '79, DEAN OF STUDENTS, LA SALLE UNIVERSITY

TEACHING IS NOT—OR, MORE PRECISELY, SHOULD NOT be—the central concern of La Salle University or any other institution of higher education.

Nonsense, you say? Please consider this alternative.

Learning is—or, more precisely, should be—the central concern of every institution of higher education, including La Salle University.

Feel better now? I thought you might.

The stories you'll read in the pages that follow blend to form a larger picture which strongly suggests that learning is alive and well in our university community and, further, that its impacts stretch far beyond the curriculum, the co-curriculum, the extra-curriculum, and the boundaries of the campus itself.

Learning is not a spectator sport nor, I believe, is it a direct result of teaching, no matter how good the teacher. Lessons culled from contemporary scholarship and practice, as well as our Lasallian traditions, convince me that the work of our university should be characterized by four words: relationships, community, involvement, and learning. Here's why.

In higher education circles, modern definitions of learning encompass all facets of human development through which a student is likely to progress during the course of enrollment. If learning is our goal, we must consider how learning occurs.

Our professional literature leads us to believe that learning is a direct function of what has come to be called involvement, defined by leading scholar Alexander Astin as the quality and quantity of physical and psychological energy the learner devotes to the academic enterprise. Simply put, the more you put into it, the more you'll get out of it.

If involvement leads to learning, we have to think about how involvement is most likely to be engendered. Again, contemporary scholarship leads us to a conclusion: Involvement is fostered in atmospheres of community, in which people perceive themselves to be—and, to the greatest extent possible, actually are—working together in common purpose toward the achievement of ends greater than their own.

If community fosters involvement, we need to determine how community may be achieved. Common sense will lead you to the same conclusion as that reached by prominent scholars: Community begins with relationships. In a university setting, that means relationships between and among students, faculty, and staff. The major theories of premature student departure (theories of student retention and success if you turn them around) are in agreement about one thing: A student's social integration into the university community is integral to the student's learning and success.

Interestingly and not at all coincidentally, the lessons of contemporary scholarship and practice mirror the legacy of St. John Baptist de La Salle. For more than three centuries, Lasallians have endeavored to touch the hearts of students (relationships) and to do so together and by association (community). The model of simultaneous classroom instruction, taken for granted today but pioneered by the early Christian Brothers, was designed in large measure to foster association among students and, by so doing, to promote involvement, with the greater learning of all as the goal.

The stories you'll read in the pages that follow demonstrate what may be accomplished in an institution of higher education that is committed to student learning and, moreover, to the promotion of student learning in accordance with the principles described above. These stories form a remarkable mosaic that reflects the impact of relationships, community, involvement, and learning on students' lives during their enrollment and, ultimately, as they employ and deepen their learning as citizens and leaders of the world they rejoin as graduates of La Salle University.

Lives Changed Forever

By Learning Beyond the Curriculum

BY ROBERT GRAY

EVERYONE TALKS ABOUT LEARNING FOR LIFE. BUT FOR some, learning is life. And it's not just a matter of going to classes; it's a case of living to the fullest. The Lasallian traditions of educating the whole person, purposeful education, and active engagement in the life of the community and the life of the mind have proved formative for thousands of La Salle graduates all around the world and over many years. Many have gone on to achieve extraordinary things, both great and small.

We talked to nine alumni about their lives, their memories of La Salle, and the paths they have chosen. Their stories reach back to different times and into the heart of what it means to be an Explorer. Each is as different as it is inspiring. In their words, we discover a sampling of the many paths laid before La Salle graduates by the care of those around them, and we discover just a few of the ways the Lasallian tradition lives on.

Father Eric Augenstein, '00

HEARING THE CALL

"I started thinking about the priesthood before," admits Father Eric Augenstein, '00, "But at La Salle, it was nourished." A double major with a B.A. in religion and philosophy and a minor in English, Rev. Augenstein received his M.A. in Catholic thought and life in 2002 and his master's in divinity two years later, both from St. Meinrad School of Theology in southern Indiana.

A native Hoosier, Rev. Augenstein has just been named Associate Pastor and assigned a parish that serves "a cluster of three churches with one staff," in the Richmond, Ind., area. "I will also be teaching religion to freshmen and sophomores at nearby Seaton High School," he says.

There could hardly have been a more appropriate training ground for Rev. Augenstein than La Salle. After all, where else could this aspiring priest with a passion for music and community involvement have found so many opportunities to, well, practice what he would later go on to preach?

"While I was at La Salle, I became very involved in campus ministry. I was on the liturgy planning team, and I also selected music for services." In addition to fine-tuning and planning liturgy and setting the musical tone for worship on campus, Rev. Augenstein, who is an accomplished pianist and organist, also sang as part of the La Salle Singers. He also served for two years as president of the 25-member mixed chorus.

"It was a club," he explains. "We met once a week and did a Christmas and spring concert on campus that was open to the public. While I was there, we organized Christmas caroling in the neighborhoods around La Salle and at nursing homes that were open to everyone in the La Salle community."

Determined to spread the music as widely as possible, Rev. Augenstein heavily recruited in "all the clubs and fraternities" on campus, he says. Each would send representatives to add their voices to the joyous noise. "We would break up into groups of 10 or 12 to go singing in a nearby neighborhood or nursing home," he remembers. "One year we recruited 100 students!"

Rev. Augenstein's other activities while at La Salle come in handy on the job as well. In his new position, Rev. Augenstein will serve as counselor, administrator, mentor, and mediator. "While I was at La Salle," he says, "I also served as chair of the Judicial Board, hearing student policy violation cases. The neat thing about the board was that, while students chaired it, faculty member were always involved."

Really, I learned more outside of the classroom than in—and I learned a lot in the classroom," he explains.

Really, I learned more outside of the classroom than in—and I learned a lot in the classroom."

Megan Barnett, '01

POLITICS, BUT NOT AS USUAL

Megan Barnett, '01, is a political animal. A political science major with minors in Spanish and business administration, she served as president of the Students' Government Association (S.G.A.) for two years, and helped the College Republicans organize and launch Political Awareness Month on campus. She was a member of the GAELS Irish Society, and a founding member of the La Salle Ambassadors. In her junior year, she joined Alpha Sigma Tau Sorority. As an alumna, she was elected to the Alumni Association Board of Directors in 2002, and is currently a member of the D.C. Metro Area Alumni Chapter, the Homecoming Planning Committee, and the Class Programs Committee. She's active.

The Plymouth Meeting, Pa., native is also the first daughter of two La Salle alums, George Barnett, '72, and Mary Hopper, '79, who still lives in Plymouth Meeting.

"At La Salle, when you show initiative, doors fly open for you."

Always interested in politics, Meg Barnett worked on campaigns for Philadelphia-area candidates, and on the Republican National Convention in Philadelphia in 2000, a full-time student all the while. As a senior, she joined the Bush/Cheney 2000 presidential campaign, and traveled around the country working with former Secretary Dick Cheney. As a press advance lead for Vice President Cheney on the Bush/Cheney '04 presidential campaign, Barnett is fully immersed in the world of politics—and she wouldn't have it any other way.

"I was president of my high school class each year at Gwynedd Mercy Academy," she says, "so I decided to pull some dedicated and hard-working friends together at La Salle, and run for student government. I met [then S.G.A. president] Trey Ulrich, '99, M.B.A. '02, during freshman orientation. He gave me an overview of what S.G.A. entailed. I thought being president would be a great opportunity to get to know how La Salle operated and to make the voice of my class known.

"At La Salle, when you show initiative, doors fly open for you," she says. "For example, in my first political science class, American Government, I was given the option of writing a long paper or keeping a journal from a three-hour-a-week internship with a political campaign."

She and a friend joined the campaign of Republican candidate for District Attorney Jack McMahon. The internship fed her appetite for politics. "I ended up working for independent political fundraisers and event planners for three years through college," she says.

Then, in 2000, with just eight weeks to go before the presidential election, Barnett was invited to join the Bush/Cheney campaign. "I had just turned 21, and was working with and learning from seasoned campaigners. It was incredible!" she says.

"I attribute the person that I have become today very much to my experiences during college," she says. "At La Salle, I learned to approach every situation with a 'can do' attitude."

A SWIMMER'S LESSONS

Shannon Bauer, '03, Bachelor of Science in Nursing, loves the water. "My sister, brother, and I started taking swimming lessons as kids," she explains. And when she was 10, she joined her first swim team. What started out as a "summer thing" soon developed into a "year-round thing," she says. By the time she was on the high school swim team, swimming was part of her identity.

Stephanie Cahill, '05, Shannon Bauer, '03, and Kimmy Evanilla, '05 at a 2003 swim meet.

"Ever since I was 12, I wanted to go to La Salle," she says. Aquatic Club championship meets at La Salle had introduced her to the facilities—and to Philadelphia. "I loved it all," she says. "When it came time to apply, I was excited to see that La Salle had my program.”

“I wanted to go somewhere where I could win as a swimmer, a place where I wouldn’t be lost in the crowd,” she says. “I got a good [athletic scholarship] offer from La Salle, and my parents recommended that I take it.” There were other motivations, as well. “I’m Catholic,” she says. “La Salle has a spiritual community that appealed to me.”

As a student athlete and nursing student, the demands on her time were enormous. “I was always up at five in the morning,” she recalls. “I had daily required clinical nursing hours. Plus, I was in the swimming pool at least four hours a day.” Through it all, the La Salle community sustained this distance swimmer who competed in the 200-yard, 500-yard, and one-mile competitions. “My teachers and coaches were flexible,” she says. “As long as they knew that I wanted to do well, they wanted to work with me.”

As important as swimming was to Sharon during her La Salle years, she somehow found time for other kinds of involvement, the fruits of which stay with her still. She participated in La Salle’s annual Branch Out Day, when students gather on the quad in the morning and are dispersed to tackle neighborhood projects. “One year, we joined with members of a community church congregation on a big clean-up project,” she says.

As part of nursing training, she taught nutrition, dental health, and other health-related topics in nearby neighborhoods. In a place like Philadelphia, says this self-described suburban girl from the small town of Harleysville, Pa. (population 8,795), “you gain perspective. Cultural awareness is valuable to me as a nurse serving diverse patients and communities. Those experiences helped me become more culturally aware, more sensitive to the differences between people.”

So, what is this swimmer/nurse doing today? “I’m working on my Master of Science in Nursing at La Salle,” she laughs. “I liked it so much, I came back!”

Al Cantello, '55

THE GRIT OF A CHAMPION, THE HEART OF A WINNER

According to Al Cantello, '55, La Salle track star, former world record holder in the javelin, and Olympic athlete, “When I graduated from high school, my oldest brother had just gotten back from World War II, and he wanted to get married. My father had died when I was 12. Ours being a typical second generation Italian family, it fell to me to become the breadwinner. So, as my peers all went off to college that fall, I went to work in the asbestos factory” in his hometown of Norristown, Pa. But something happened that would change everything for him. That something was La Salle.

Obviously, Cantello had already made an impression on college coaches, because, as he tells it, “Through some divine intervention, I stayed in shape” while working shifts at the factory.

Then, after two years of lunch boxes and swing shifts, “the La Salle track coach offered me one of the few athletic scholarships available at the time,” he says. “It changed my whole life.”

“The thing about La Salle is, they took this broken branch and fixed it.”

La Salle in the early 1950s was a very different place than it is today. “There were no dorms and no women,” he explains. “The guys wore overcoats, ties, and hats. One thing that made me unique was that I was not from Philadelphia. Another thing was the fact that I had a car, which also made me popular.” Among Cantello’s fond memories of those days: road trips to Madison Square Garden to see nationally ranked Explorers basketball.

“We’d pile in my car and drive up to the city to the game,” he recalls. “Those were the days.”

Earning a B.A. in English education while throwing javelin all four years as an undergraduate, Cantello kept in shape and continued improving. Soon after he graduated, he was tapped as an American Olympic hopeful. And, though he set the world record for javelin throw in 1959, and qualified for and competed in the 1960 Olympics in Rome, Italy, “the biggest thrill I ever had as an athlete was being awarded the Penn Relay watch in 1953 as part the La Salle team,” he says. “I still have that watch.”

In Cantello’s mind, his years at La Salle “were the best of times. The mantra of the school was always to give the blue collar second generation American a chance; that is what La Salle was about,” he explains. “When I was there, we had a nationally-ranked swim team and basketball team. The war had just ended. There was optimism and innocence and a purity of purpose among people. That’s what made it such a great time for me.”

And then there were individuals, specifically Brother Christopher, then-Dean of Admissions. “He wrote the letter to the draft board that kept me out of the Korean War, which was very unusual in those days. You see, I came from the ‘wrong side of the tracks.’”

“The thing about La Salle is, they took this broken branch and fixed it,” he says, warming to his point. “I’ve been coaching over 40 years—cross country, indoor, and outdoor track—75 athletes on a team, three seasons of the year [at the U.S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.]. Why? Because La Salle took a chance on me. For that, I’m forever loyal to the school.”

Dave Carberry, '74

TOUCHING LIVES, GIVING BACK

“Whenever you work on setting policy,” says Dave Carberry, '74, B.A. in accounting, and Vice President of Finance for Johnson & Johnson Healthcare Systems, “you need to be able to stand up and articulate your point of view.” At which executive seminar did the

51-year-old Yardley, Pa., resident, who also holds an M.B.A. and is a certified management accountant, learn this valuable lesson? The La Salle Student Advisory Council to the Dean of Students.

“I felt it was important to get involved and help out on campus,” he says. And Carberry’s interests ranged wide. “I stayed pretty busy at La Salle, and had a lot of fun doing it.” He served as a resident assistant, helping keep the peace at close quarters where Jimi Hendrix devotees sometimes clashed with the more scholarly set. At one time or another, he participated in Stage Crew, served as treasurer for numerous campus projects, was on the residence council, and, as already mentioned, worked with the dean as a student advisor.

One reason Carberry felt comfortable getting involved on so many levels was that, for him, “La Salle was always a safe community. It’s small enough that you don’t get lost.” Like many alumni, he was the first generation in his family to attend college. “I knew little about the selection process, and I had very little money,” he says. The Philadelphia native says he wanted to “stay close to home and to the work opportunities in the city.”

“I stayed pretty busy at La Salle, and had a lot of fun doing it.”

As a resident assistant, Carberry came to enjoy the “camaraderie of the Brothers,” who played a central role in student life. “As a head resident, I managed other resident assistants in other halls. I learned to manage and resolve conflicts from that experience, and the Brothers helped me so much.”

And Carberry gives back. “I’ve always felt grateful for what I got at La Salle,” he says. “Helping students understand what a career in business is all about—I enjoy that.”

So, today, he serves on the business advisory board that helps the School of Business strengthen connections with the world of business by focusing curriculum, marketing, and internship opportunities. “This helps the business school tailor its product,” he explains, “not just to meet needs of the business community, but to also help students be more successful when they hit the job market.”

As a La Salle University team leader for Johnson & Johnson, Carberry helps attract rising generations of La Salle business graduates to Johnson & Johnson. “We’re very successful at attracting graduates from La Salle,” he says, obviously glad for the graduates and his company. “I am very proud of that, and I plan to continue.”

Andrew Jannett, M.D., '43

AMERICAN DREAMS FULFILLED

Not all lessons reveal themselves right away. Sometimes, they surface much later to enrich life anew. For Andrew F. Jannett, M.D., '43, who earned his B.A. at La Salle by the time he was 20, saw action as a young Navy officer in the Philippines campaigns of World War II, earned a medical degree from The Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, and served as a surgeon in the U.S. Air Force in Bitburg, Germany, during the 1970s, life must have always seemed rich. And now, rich with memories, Jannett has begun to write, a love first nurtured in his undergraduate years at La Salle.

He was born in south central New Jersey in 1923. "Hammondton, N.J.," he writes in his memoir, A Twentieth-Century American 1923-2000, "lies in the south central part of the state and was founded sometime after the Civil War. Its flat-surface sandy soil lent itself to the successful growing of almost every berry, fruit, and vegetable. In size the town at my birth numbered about five thousand people." With characteristic attention to detail, Jannett begins his memoir, one of three books—including one of stories and another of poems—that are the latest expression of his passion for life and his love of language.

"One of the most important things is to be able to communicate," says this doctor-turned-writer. "And I credit La Salle with helping me improve my skills. I was always a nut about English classes. But, it wasn't until much later I actually got a chance to sit down and write."

"Having the background I had at La Salle, I have been able to lead a moral existence."

In addition to English classes, Jannett also honed his writing talent as a reporter for the campus paper, the Collegian. The careful distillation of a point down to its journalistic essence is recognizable many years later in his memoir. Noting the credentials of his premed classmates at La Salle, he notes, "I was fearful of the competition." But in his studies, as in so much of his life, he need not have feared.

Looking back to those tumultuous years of the Great Depression and World War II, Jannett reflects on the abiding moral strength and security he found at La Salle.

"Having the background I had at La Salle, I have been able to lead a moral existence. I'll give you an example," he says. He celebrated his 21st birthday aboard a Navy ship in Colón, Panama (where he cast his first vote for president, by absentee ballot). As he tells the story, "I was surprised when the skipper wished me a happy birthday, and ordered me to go ashore and 'enjoy myself.'" Realizing that he had wandered into the red light district, Jannett quickly returned to ship, leaving the "enjoyment" on shore.

Captain Smiley said, 'Andy, did you have a good time?'

'Yes,' I replied.

He said, 'It's only 9:30.'

I made no reply.

Moral character, clean living: Andrew Jannett credits La Salle with fostering both. "Who you are by the time you are 21 is who you are going to be," he says. "My formative years were spent at La Salle, and those experiences helped to form me. I owe La Salle a lot."

James Kirschke, Ph.D., '64

COMING THROUGH FIRES OF ADVERSITY

James Kirschke, Ph.D., '64, B.A. in English, author and professor of English at Villanova University, is a true American hero. This decorated Vietnam War veteran earned his Purple Heart the hard way. By 1967, Kirschke had served in the steaming jungles of Vietnam as commander of mortar and rifle platoons. He was no stranger to the perils of combat as he led his platoon on yet another patrol. As he tells it, "This last area we were in was really mined and booby-trapped. It was my job to lead my men through it. I had done it before," he says. "But if you are really doing this job, you can't always be lucky."

The explosion came without warning, instantly blowing off his left leg at the hip and taking with it half of his right leg, the remainder of which sustained extensive nerve damage. "It was a box mine filled with rusty nails," he explains calmly. "I was really creamed by it."

Rewind six years to 1961, when Kirschke first arrived on campus at La Salle, "I came from a lower-class background," he explains. "I had no father, and my mom was a waitress." At that time, Vietnam meant nothing more to most Americans than a "place on the map," he says.

"I learned things about being successful and honed my leadership skills, which I've called upon as a Marine officer, a faculty member, and as a professional. La Salle gave me the environment to do this kind of work."

Rather than face mandatory draft, he had joined a marine training program that offered a speedy route up the pay scale and regular paychecks. He also made time to get involved in campus life. In addition to the work he put into writing the first constitution for the Student Court, which, for years, served as the judicial body overseeing student policy violations and other offenses on campus, he also served as its first justice.

"I was pretty active," he says, with characteristic modesty. He served as vice president of his freshman and junior classes, president of his sophomore and senior classes, and vice president of the student council during his senior year, all as he continued working to pay for school. And he was writing.

"My teachers did everything to encourage me," he explains. "Four English professors in particular opened the doors for me. Claude Koch, who would look at anything I wrote; Brother Emery Mollenhauer, my first composition teacher; Brother Patrick Sheekey, department head and editor of the [now-defunct] Four Quarters literary magazine; and John Keenan ['52, Professor Emeritus of English]. These men devoted more time to me than lots of students get in their entire college careers."

That attention paid off. In addition to his memoir of Vietnam, titled Not Going Home Alone, A Marine's Story, he is the author of Henry James and Impressionism, Willa Cather and Six Writers from the Great War, and the forthcoming biography, Gouverneur Morris (1752-1816): Author, Statesman, and Man of the World.

At La Salle, he says, "I learned things about being successful and honed my leadership skills, which I've called upon as a Marine officer, a faculty member, and as a professional. La Salle gave me the environment to do this kind of work."

Colleen McGeehan, '93

VOLUNTEERING FOR GOOD

Good deeds, like ripples spreading outward in a pond, can resonate through generations. Maybe that's the way the idea came to Colleen McGeehan, '93, B.A. in secondary education and mathematics, and a teacher at the Young Women's Leadership School in East Harlem, N.Y. Her idea was that, like her, her students should have the chance to experience volunteer work. After all, during her years at La Salle as part of Campus Ministry, McGeehan had seen for herself the joys of volunteering, of doing "something that was beyond ourselves."

While an undergraduate, her volunteer work had taken her twice to Appalachia during spring breaks. One year, they went "to a work camp for families and kids" in rural Kentucky, she says. "It was a farm cooperative that families used to help cut costs." Another year, she and fellow volunteers worked in West Virginia on a home repair project. "Many coal mining towns had put up ramshackle homes in the 1930s and '40s," she explains. "People still live in them."

So it only seemed natural to McGeehan that, as a teacher, she should help her students get involved, too. "Volunteering in Appalachia was a seminal experience for me. I said to my colleagues, 'we should do this, too.'" Soon, they were taking groups of high school students to Appalachia to work on the same kind of projects McGeehan had experienced while in college. When driving became an issue, "we switched to doing local Habitat for Humanity projects," she says. "Volunteering really enriched my life and my students'. It helped us see each other differently."

As it turns out, much of what McGeehan sees is through the eyes of a volunteer. In fact, it was through the Lasallian Volunteers, a program that places graduates in volunteer programs, that she first came to New York, where she now lives and works. "The people in that program are very interested in social justice," she says. "They opened my eyes to volunteering as a graduate."

People often talk about how Campus Ministry was always a place that allowed people to be themselves," she says, remembering fondly how working with others could hasten achievement of a common goal of helping those in need. "It was a place where you'd meet people you might not get to meet," she explains. "Even though we might have different reasons for volunteering, in the end, everyone was contributing to the same thing."

"I would call myself 'Lasallian,'" she says proudly. At its best, "the Lasallian community means being connected and aware of the world in which you live. It might mean service; it might mean supporting those in service. For me," she explains, "it has meant education."

Daniel Tann, Esq., '82

LEVELING THE FIELD OF DREAMS

Daniel Tann, Esq., '82, from a 1981 Explorer Yearbook photograph with Students' Government Association Officers.

Baseball can be a great teacher. Ask Philadelphia native Daniel Tann, Esq., '82, B.S. in accounting with a concentration in organizational behavior management. "When I was 9 or 10 years old growing up in West Philly next to a park, the city was segregated," he says. "But we never had enough kids for two full baseball teams." Solution: Go to the other side of the park, and invite the Italian kids to join in and "bridge the gap."

One day, he says, "the police were called. They told us—the black kids—that we couldn't play there. That was my first exposure to discrimination. That's when I decided to become a lawyer."

During his undergraduate years at La Salle, Tann wasted no time helping create new institutions on campus, leading the student body through elected office in student government, and bolstering campus awareness of discrimination.

His student government career began "as chair of the Food Service Committee," he explains. Next, he was elected sophomore class senator. In his junior year, he served as Vice President of Business Affairs. In his senior year, vice president of Student Affairs and President of the student senate.

"I was also a founder of the Mu Upsilon chapter of Phi Beta Sigma fraternity at La Salle," he adds. Tann first learned about PBS, one of the historically African American fraternities founded at Howard University in 1914, when he spotted some unfamiliar African American students on campus "handing out information on sickle cell anemia. I had known someone who died of it," he says, "so I stopped to talk to them." They were PBS fraternity brothers from another school, out on a community-based activity. "What they were doing was very hands-on," he says. "That intrigued me."

Elected as the chapter's First President in 1981, he coordinated a comprehensive "Black History Month" program with the Black Students of La Salle (B.S.L.) organization. It would be the first of many social, cultural, and political programs aimed specifically at black students. "The fraternity," he says, "was a great outlet." He also worked with the La Salle Urban Center to interface with community groups to "put an African American face on the University in dealing with community issues," he explains.

"I think today the University tries very hard to work with the community," he says. That's at least partially due to his groundbreaking efforts. And Tann continues to work hard for his alma mater.

A member of the La Salle Alumni Association Board of Directors since he graduated in 1982, he more recently founded the African American Alumni Association. "My major goal is to work for more scholarships for African American students at La Salle," he says. To that end, in 2000, "we formally endowed the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Scholarship, which is named for one of the first African American graduates of La Salle's pre-med program."

"I was always taught that if you get to a place in your life where you can help others," he says, "you are obligated to help." La Salle's founder couldn't have put it better.

"I was always taught that if you get to a place in your life where you can help others, you are obligated to help."

LA SALLE'S BOYS ^{A_ND} GIRLS OF SUMMER

BY JON CAROULIS AND ROBERT HOFFMAN, '01

SUMMER IS MANY THINGS; AMONG THEM, VACATIONS, make-up courses, and, of course, baseball.

Several La Salle University alums are involved with baseball, doing just about everything but swinging a bat.

When, once upon a time, a TV professional asked Leigh McDonald Tobin, '87, to name her dream job, she didn't hesitate.

"PR director for the Phillies," she said.

Dreams do come true.

Since 1990, Tobin has been a Phillies employee, and is now in charge of the team's media relations. But being a fan and an employee are different experiences.

"Once you start, you're awed (being around players). It was the weirdest feeling. Mike Schmidt was my hero growing up, and there he was. In the hallways, I'd hear (announcer) Harry Kalas' voice behind me. It all becomes reality instead of a fantasy," she says. Working in the team's new stadium this season "has been awesome."

In 1997, for the 50th anniversary of Jackie Robinson's charge through baseball's race barrier, his widow, Rachel, attended the unveiling of a Philadelphia mural of her husband by David McShane, '88.

The three-story work on North Broad Street, a few miles south of La Salle, depicts Robinson stealing home in the 1955 World Series.

"So often, I've seen images and likenesses of my husband," Mrs. Robinson said at the unveiling. "When I look up at this mural, that's him."

McShane was a biology major, but always dabbled in painting. Later, he studied and pursued art full time, and when the director of Philadelphia's mural program asked if he would do one on Robinson, he accepted.

June 2001 was not going to be easy for Dennis Lehman, '73, Executive Vice President for Business Affairs of the Cleveland Indians. He got his start in baseball working for the Philadelphia Phillies, and thanks to inter-league play, the two teams faced each other in Cleveland.

"I certainly had mixed feelings about it," he says.

Lehman started working for the Phillies on summer vacations in high school. When the club moved to Veterans Stadium in 1971, he ran the scoreboard for the Phillies and the Eagles.

Because most games were at night, Lehman finished his education at La Salle during the day, obtaining a degree in political science. He was also moving up the Phillies ladder, working on the financial side. In 1988, the Indians offered him a position in which he'd be responsible for all revenue operations.

Even though he's only 25, Kevin Ibach, '00, has been a baseball lifer. His father was a sports writer and worked for the Chicago Cubs. Ibach played baseball at La Salle, got an internship with the Baltimore Orioles, and is now the club's Baseball Operations Assistant, in which he works with major league and minor league players in a variety of roles.

"I would love to eventually get into coaching. I always tell people when and if the Orioles win the World Series, and I have that ring on my finger, I'll be more than happy to hang it up no matter what position I have. Having a World Series ring would be the ultimate goal. I don't know if I could beat that, so why not give something back to the game?"

Making Rounds Worldwide

BY KIMBERLY MACALISTER,
M.A. '04

IN A SMALL, CONGESTED ROOM WITH LITTLE LIGHT AND a lack of modern equipment, miracles are performed and people's lives are forever changed.

Despite the less-than-ideal conditions, Roger Bues, M.D., '64, and a team of other volunteers from the World Surgical Foundation, Inc., work at a frantic pace correcting cleft lips, accessing and removing lumps and bumps the size of grapefruits, performing mastectomies, hysterectomies, thyroidectomies, and whatever else they can handle in a week's time.

On average, Bues and his team complete 200 surgeries on their missions to some of the poorest countries in the world.

"We go wild and work like mad while we are there," Bues said.

The World Surgical Foundation, Inc., formerly known as the World Mission of Central Pennsylvania, strives to provide health care for the underprivileged in Third World countries.

"For me, this is the ultimate," said Bues, an anesthesiologist with Riverside Anesthesiology Associates in Harrisburg, Pa. "I always thought missionary work would be the most satisfying thing you could do in the field of medicine. It is pure patient care and the only reason to go on these missions is because you care about people. And these people truly appreciate our being there."

Despite his several missions, which have included trips to the Philippines, Honduras, India, and Thailand, Bues is always overwhelmed by the reception his group receives.

"Hundreds of people are lined up waiting for us to arrive. Many have traveled for days to get there," he said.

According to Bues, the foundation does perform some difficult surgeries, but because of the conditions, none of extreme risk. "A few lives are saved, and the quality of life for many is improved," he said. "For example, our patients with cleft lips are outcasts, but with corrective surgery, their lives are completely changed."

Bues became involved with the former World Mission of Central Pennsylvania in 1997 shortly after it was organized. The foundation's goal is to perform one major mission per year. Upcoming missions include Bangladesh and a trip back to the Philippines. The foundation also supplies equipment to other organizations performing similar missionary work.

"Many countries don't have adequate public health systems,” said Bucs, who is on the Board of Directors for the World Surgical Foundation, Inc. “In the Philippines, for example, if a patient has an emergency, it’s taken care of. But once the emergency is over, if that patient can’t pay for care, that is the end of it. We’ve closed colostomies for people that have had them for 20 years.”

Preparing for a mission is just as much work as participating in it. Funds need to be raised to pay for expenses such as shipping equipment and medication. The 40 or so volunteers who go on each mission pay for their own expenses. Participants include anesthesiologists, surgeons, recovery room and operating room nurses, and non-medical volunteers. The volunteers not specifically trained in medicine help coordinate the trip, and while on missions, they assist in sterilizing equipment and maintaining records.

In addition to raising money, the organization also needs to coordinate with the host country the shipping and receiving of supplies.

The World Surgical Foundation, Inc., has a warehouse that stores older equipment such as x-ray and anesthesia machines, IV poles, and operating beds donated by hospitals and doctors’ offices. Prior to leaving on a mission, the host country is asked to fill out an equipment wish list.

“We find out what our next location will need, and we go to our warehouse and try to fill their requests with what we collected,” Bucs said.

Regardless of how much equipment the foundation can supply, the team of volunteers is still working under poverty-stricken conditions, which often call for some ingenuity.

“We do the best we can with what we have, but we often lack basic equipment we take for granted in the United States. So, at times, we do things very primitively,” Bucs said. “I once put together a self-made anesthesia machine. The wonders of duct tape—I felt like MacGyver.”

Perhaps one of the most essential and basic of supplies that doctors lack is blood. Bucs recalls an incident where a patient had lost 30 percent of her blood volume and was in desperate need of a transfusion. Volunteers went out and asked anyone they came across to donate blood because there was literally not a drop in the hospital.

“The blood bank consisted of an empty refrigerator,” Bucs said. “Police officers donated, and, luckily, they were the right blood type—she made it.”

In spite of—or perhaps because of—the health care environment existing in the host countries, Bucs understands the impact he is making.

“We are absolutely needed,” he said. “We bring surgical expertise and care to underserved areas and people where no one else would—or perhaps could.”

According to Bucs, the need for more missions of this nature is widespread.

“We are always looking for more volunteers to help meet our goals. There is so much need out there, we don’t even put a dent in it,” he said.

Next year, Bucs and his team are planning a trip back to the Philippines. “There is never a shortage of people to help,” he said.

Elaine Bucs has joined her husband on his trips abroad; she sterilizes equipment and assists patients as needed. The Bucs resides in Hershey, Pa. They have four children, and recently welcomed their first grandchild.

For information on how to become a volunteer for the World Surgical Foundation, Inc., visit their Web site at www.worldsurgicalfoundation.org.

Paying Honor

Roger Bucs, M.D., '64, grew up in the small town of Roebing, N.J., where his father, George, worked in a steel mill. Despite the fact that George Bucs did not go further than sixth grade in school, he was a strong believer that a good education would take a person places in life.

He was adamant that his son and daughter go on to college and earn higher education degrees, and both did. After his father died in 1991, Roger Bucs and his brother-in-law Thomas Burke, '60, wanted to find a way to honor him. The two came up with the perfect plan: a scholarship in his name. The George J. Bucs Scholarship originated in 1993, and provides financial assistance to a La Salle student from Florence Township, N.J., where Roebing is located. The scholarship follows the student throughout the course of his or her four years at La Salle, provided the student maintains or exceeds a specified grade point average.

LIVING A GOLFER'S DREAM

BY KIMBERLY MACALISTER, M.A. '04

WHEN ASKED HOW OFTEN HE PLAYS GOLF, 74-YEAR-OLD JIM FINEGAN, '51, casually says, "Oh, I play only on days that end in a 'y'."

No one would expect less from the man who is revered as the foremost American authority on golf in Scotland, Ireland, England, and Wales. He makes sure to play nine holes with two golf balls; that way, he gets in his full 18-hole game every day at Philadelphia Country Club.

Finegan has been an avid golfer since he was a boy. He started playing the game when he was 9 years old. Two years later, he began to caddie. Growing up, if he wasn't in school or doing homework, he could be found on the golf course.

After graduating from La Salle in 1951, where he made a name for himself through his academic achievements as well as his golf ability, Finegan spent three and a half years in the Navy. In September of 1956, he started out as a copywriter for Gray & Rogers, a Philadelphia-based advertising agency. With his enthusiasm and creativity, Finegan worked his way up the ranks and was named Chairman and C.E.O. of the company in 1972. In 1977, Finegan became the only golfer inducted into La Salle's Hall of Athletes.

Prior to his retirement from Gray & Rogers in 1990, Finegan began writing pieces for national golf magazines. After he retired and could devote full time to the game he loved, he started writing books.

In all, Finegan has written five books and is currently working on his sixth. His first book is a comprehensive history of golf in Philadelphia, titled, A Centennial Tribute to Golf in Philadelphia. A lifetime member of Pine Valley, he wrote the club history, which was published in 2000.

But, perhaps he is best known for his trilogy of travel books, published by Simon & Schuster, that follow Finegan as he lives a golfer's dream of playing the most highly regarded courses in the British Isles. Though he has played virtually all of the American "shrines," such as Merion, Oakmont, Augusta National, and Pebble Beach, he has not played as widely in the United States as in the United Kingdom and Ireland.

"While many of the greatest courses within the British Isles are already well-known," Finegan said, "it is my pleasure from time to time to discover an unheralded gem, like Cruden Bay in Scotland or Narin & Portnoo in Ireland, and bring it to the attention of the American golfer."

His first two travel books were published in 1996. Blasted Heath and Blessed Greens covers the courses of Scotland;

Emerald Fairways and Foam-Flecked Seas embraces golfing in Ireland. Finegan said the last book in the series, All Courses Great and Small: A Golfer's Pilgrimage to England and Wales, took seven years to get published because Simon & Schuster believed that, of the hundreds of thousands of annual American visitors to England and Wales, relatively few were there for golf.

Still, Finegan found a host of marvelous courses while researching the England/Wales book, and is optimistic that they will draw American golfers to these two lands.

"The Addington, just outside London, is a great parkland course that the world has very little knowledge of," Finegan said. "And Pennard, in South Wales, is a majestic links course routed through spectacular sand hills."

His current book remains untitled, but it finds him back in Scotland and Ireland writing about many of the courses he has already covered.

Instead of a travel guide that one takes on a trip, his new volume is going to be an oversized coffee table book with "breathtaking" photography to correspond with his words.

So, according to this golf historian, what makes a great golf course?

"Great holes," Finegan said. "There are many courses that can generate considerable tension, but some of them turn out to be obstacle courses rather than golf courses. A golfer wants challenge and excitement, but the degree of difficulty should be reasonable, not ruinous."

COOKING UP SUCCESS

BY CAITLIN MURRAY

RALPH PALLARINO, '94, REMEMBERS PLAYING “hot dog stand” with his brother as a young child in the basement of his family’s Chicago home.

“That’s the earliest memory I have of anything that would give me the impression that maybe owning a restaurant is what I wanted to do,” said the 32-year-old head chef who co-owns two popular Conshohocken, Pa., restaurants.

Now, instead of plastic hot dogs and relish, Chef Pallarino is cooking up innovative dishes of balsamic marinated baby lamb chops with a shallot demi-glaze and, one of his signature creations, lobster macaroni and cheese, which won “Best of Philly” in 2002.

He and two friends, Kim Strengari and Marianne Gere, went into business together four years ago.

“I would always cook dinner for my friends on the weekends,” said Pallarino, who has had no professional culinary training. “They thought I was good, but I didn’t know if I was good enough on that level.” After he cooked for a friend’s birthday party in 1999, party guest Strengari approached him about opening up a small Italian BYOB with Pallarino as the chef.

Their first venture, Bella Luna, was an upscale Italian eatery on the Main Line. In the wake of its success, the trio opened Stella Blu in Conshohocken two years later—the more casual of the sibling restaurants. Though Bella Luna has since closed, Stella Blu has done so well that they decided to open another place a few months ago to accommodate the overflow of reservations. At their newest establishment, the Gypsy Saloon, located across the street from Stella Blu, a variety of fare from ribs and burgers to lobster risotto appear on the menu.

Without having set foot in a culinary school in his life, where does Pallarino get it?

“Growing up in a big Italian family, you can’t help but get involved in the cooking that’s always going on. My grandma was the one who really got me interested. She and my mom always invited me into the kitchen,” recalled the chef, who began cooking at age 10. “I don’t put a ton of thought into it; it just comes naturally to me.”

Do other restaurateurs doubt his “natural” ability in the kitchen? If so, Pallarino doesn’t blame them. “It’s like an actor who doesn’t pay his dues and then gets a gig on The Sopranos. I’m sure people get mad—wouldn’t you? But once they taste my food, they can decide for themselves.”

In addition to his restaurants’ success, Pallarino has developed quite a reputation for himself in the culinary world. In fact, he appeared on NBC’s reality show, The Restaurant, starring celebrity chef Rocco DiSpirito.

He was recruited by DiSpirito’s business partner, restaurant financier Jeffrey Chodorow, to try out as DiSpirito’s potential replacement in light of recent turmoil between the two.

“He said he heard about me and wanted to taste my food. So he came into my restaurant, and I did a tasting for him and his family,” said Pallarino, who is a big fan of the show. “A month later, I got a call from a mutual friend who said Jeffrey was having problems with Rocco, and asked if I’d be interested in trying out.”

In an episode that aired on May 10, Pallarino, who was described as a “wonder kid,” was shown preparing a multi-course tasting for Chodorow and his associates.

He also starred on the Food Network’s Date Plate, a reality dating series in which two eligible bachelors or bachelorettes cook a romantic meal within a fixed budget in the hopes of winning over a blind date. Pallarino’s role was to help the not-so-food-savvy contestants prepare a creative menu and meal.

Having created such a name for himself in the industry, it seems ironic that the restaurateur—a former accounting and finance major—had no intention of following such a career path. “I never had my heart set on being a chef,” he said. Instead, he wanted to go into insurance or finance, which he did after he graduated from La Salle in 1994.

Though he cooks at one of his restaurants just about every night, he never quit his “day job” as an insurance broker, which, he said, has afforded him the luxury of owning his own business and investing in other things. “If I hadn’t learned what I did at La Salle, I would have never been able to start my own business or do any of this.”

“If I hadn’t learned what I did at La Salle, I would have never been able to start my own business or do any of this.”

A DIFFERENT KIND OF HERO COMES HOME FROM IRAQ

BY JOHN GROGAN, INQUIRER COLUMNIST

The following story is reprinted from The Philadelphia Inquirer with permission.

FOR 14 MONTHS, MARIA MURT DID NOT DARE ALLOW herself to dream of the future. Her husband, Tom ['89], a former Upper Moreland Township commissioner, had been plucked from her life to fight in Iraq.

Until she had him safely back home, the future would stay on hold.

She soldiered on, day by day, in her new role as single parent to three children, avoiding news programs and cringing each time the doorbell rang, afraid of the message that might arrive.

Recently, the Upper Moreland woman finally allowed herself to exhale. Standing in Philadelphia International Airport, she saw her soldier husband making his way toward her through the crowd.

"Tom!" she screamed. And they fell into each other's arms, neither able to say a word. Their three children—Katie, 11, Daniel, 9, and Patrick, 6—swarmed around. Murt's father, James, a World War II veteran, was there, too, and so was a color guard from the Willow Grove post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

"We were all just so emotional," Tom Murt said from home this week. "We were all crying."

The entire time Murt had been overseas, he was able to speak on the phone with the children just three times. On his first night home, Murt read bedtime stories to them, and the next morning, he helped make their lunches and walked them to the bus stop. "That's what I missed the most," he said, "the simple, everyday parent things."

The hardest part of his deployment was not the scorpions or the pit toilets or the constant threat of attack. "The really, really hardest part is being away from your loved ones," he said.

As I reported Feb. 23, Staff Sgt. Murt coped with the loneliness and boredom by launching a personal crusade to help the impoverished Iraqi children in the villages around his base. He sent e-mails home to friends and colleagues, asking them to donate whatever they could, and the local community responded in force. By the time he left, Murt had received and distributed more than 200 large boxes of clothing, toys and school supplies. In the process, he befriended hundreds of Iraqi children and built inestimable goodwill.

He could not wait to return to his own family, but part of his heart remains behind with the children he will never forget. "Once you see that kind of poverty," he said, "it's really very hard to stop thinking about it."

But now he is home, and home is where he plans to stay. He [planned to] start back at his job as an instructor and academic adviser at Pennsylvania State University's Abington campus [in the fall]. He said he had no plans to try to regain his seat on the Upper Moreland Board of Commissioners, which he resigned when he was deployed.

"We never expected it to be this long," Maria Murt said of their separation. "But we're together again. We're back as a unit. I just feel so lucky to have him home again."

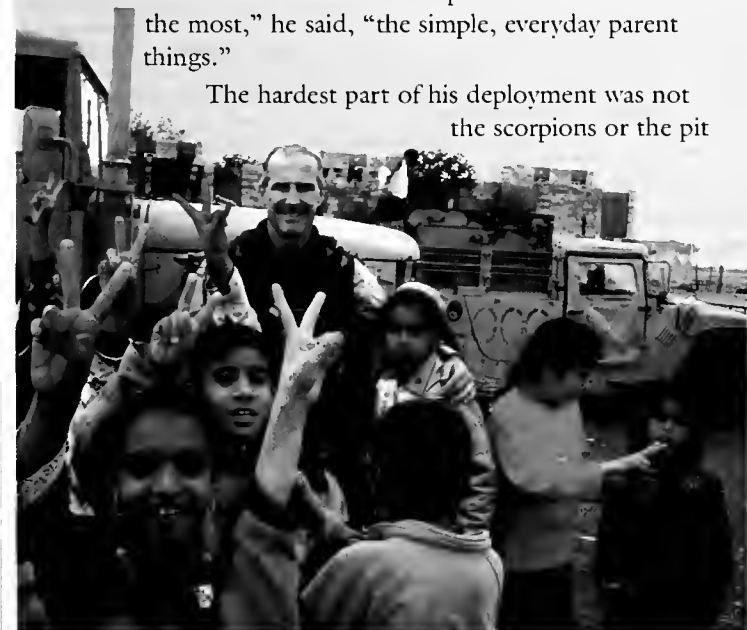

She has seen the flag-draped coffins, and knows how differently their story could have ended.

On his first morning home, right after putting the children on the bus to school, Tom and Maria Murt attended 9 a.m. Mass at St. David's Catholic Church in Willow Grove, where they are parishioners. They both had a few things for which to give thanks.

For Murt, the adjustment to civilian life will take time. His appetite is spotty, he continues to sleep fitfully, and loud noises bother him. His wife hopes her home cooking will help him regain some of the 40 pounds he lost in the Iraq desert.

On a recent afternoon, Murt stepped out onto the front porch of the family home to greet yet another well-wisher. His children were clutched around him, not about to let him out of their sight again. It was an American portrait—a soldier home from war, a family made whole again.

Beside him, a large, white banner flapped in the breeze. It read: "Welcome home, Tom. We love you and we are proud of you."

Drowning in the Clear Pool: Cultural Narcissism, Technology, and Character Education by Francis J. Ryan, '69; John J. Sweeder, '71; and Maryanne R. Bednar

Peter Lang Publishing, 2002; 198 pp., $29.95

With marked increases in school violence, educators have again been called upon to emphasize character education in their classrooms. While diversity of community values has rendered such efforts increasingly problematic, a more fundamental impasse to character education is cultural narcissism. Adolescents influenced by an inflated sense of grandiosity, entitlement, devaluation of others, and self-absorption often dismiss character education as irrelevant or constraining to their "me-centered" lifestyles. To counter cultural narcissism, teachers need to foster character education by developing the moral system (self-understanding, social cognition, moral sentiments, and moral judgment) in each of their students. A creative use of educational technology can help teachers raise moral sensitivity, while simultaneously diluting the negative influences of cultural narcissism that pervades much of contemporary American life. (from the book jacket)

Francis J. Ryan, Ed.D., '69, is the director of La Salle University's American Studies Program. He is also a professor in the program and teaches courses in American studies and American history. John J. Sweeder, Ed.D., '71, is a professor in La Salle's Education Department. He teaches educational technology, adolescent development, and methods courses in secondary education. They co-wrote the book with their colleague, a professor of education at La Salle, Maryanne Bednar, Ph.D.

Through Ashley's Eyes by JoAnna Robinson, '81, Xlibris Corporation, 2003; 119 pp., $20.99

Ashley reveals the abuse and womanizing affairs of Granddad George, which caused her Grandma Susan to leave her hometown of Greenville, S.C., and secretly flee North with her four girls: Lillian, Mary Ann, Sarah, Eva, and two granddaughters.

Lillian is Grandma Susan's oldest daughter. She is an unwed mother of two small girls, Jennifer and Dolores. She was glad to move up North because she knew that it was the only way she was ever going to separate from her first love, William Brooks. Once the family moved, Lillian's life changed. (excerpted from the book jacket)

JoAnna Robinson, '81, is new to the writing world. She is currently working on her second book, Whispers from God: That Still, Small Voice. She and her husband live in Philadelphia.

The Deafening Silence: A Memoir by Rosemarie Manes, M.A. '87, LMFT

1st Books, 2003; 256 pp., $12.50

Eleven-year old Rosemary lives in South Philadelphia. She plays hop-scotch, jacks, and ball, and visits her father's produce store, called Mike's. Rosemary loves to watch him tease women, argue with men, and give produce to nuns.

His store bustles with the force of his personality—except when the gangster-looking men arrive. They register as unimportant until Rosemary's father plunges a knife into his chest.

He dies leaving Rosemary's mother with 12 children, the youngest at age three. As word spreads of his suicide in the neighborhood, even Blind Man Joe betrays Rosemary, saying they can no longer be friends.

The family moves to an Irish Catholic neighborhood where the name Pasquarello becomes another obstacle to overcome. Against this background is rage at her father and her mother demanding The Deafening Silence surrounding his suicide. Rosemary navigates realities such as going to bed hungry and being a teenager who was forced out to work.

As the young woman's heart emerges and with the encouragement of her fiancé, she challenges The Deafening Silence. On Rosemary's wedding day, her mother reveals her family's secrets.

The Deafening Silence is a book about a father's suicide, a mother's indomitable strength, and a daughter's odyssey through the mire of rage and abandonment into a young woman's triumph of love. (from the publisher)

Rosemarie Manes, M.A. '87, LMFT, is an executive/personal coach and a licensed marriage and family therapist. Her work with families in private practice has taught her that love is not always enough to ward off the horrors that can beset a family. She lives in the Philadelphia area with her husband, John. Their children, Audrey and John Jr., and grandchildren live nearby.

AN UNLIKELY KINSHIP

BY JON CAROULIS

It was unlikely that Jason Ager, '04, and Joanne Holmes, '04, would have met at La Salle. She was a working grandmother from New Jersey going part-time, usually at night, and he was a young honors student who lived off campus with friends.

Holmes, who is 41, started and stopped her college career several times, taking 17 years to earn her degree in social work. Ager, 21, who says he had things easy, finished in four years, received the senior award for best foreign language student at La Salle, and won a Fulbright Scholarship to study in Austria.

Being a social work major, Holmes was required to do two internships. Being a single parent, spending time at an unpaid internship was not possible, so she found employment at social service agencies and worked her school requirements around her job.

A double major in English and German, Ager wrote a 55-page paper about the late Austrian Jewish writer Leo Perutz's influence on contemporary Viennese writer Doron Rabinovici, which he submitted for the Fulbright. He will continue to study these writers and will teach English for one to two years. (Ager is the 52nd La Salle student to receive a Fulbright since 1965.)

The two met for the first time on a sunny afternoon in April to tape a TV show on La Salle's Channel 56. They chatted non-stop for almost two hours, impressing each other with what they had accomplished.

"She's awesome; I don't know if I could have persevered the way she did," Ager said of Holmes. Ager described the support he got from his parents and his teachers, saying, "The universe was in place for me to succeed."

"He's incredible," said Holmes. "He did what he did because he wanted to do it; no one was pushing him. I work with young people, and you don't often see someone like that as focused as Jason was."

Both found what they needed at La Salle: supportive friends and faculty, and challenges to overcome. They also found a friend in one another that day in April.

A LONG WAY TO MY DIPLOMA

BY MERKHAT SHARIPZHAN, '04

I am 41 years old, and I am from the Republic of Kazakhstan in Central Asia. I have been living and working in one of Europe's most beautiful cities, Prague, since 1995. So, I am a Kazakh, living in the Czech Republic, working for the U.S. Broadcasting Company, and now I can add one more clause—I am a member of La Salle University's alumni.

The world is really shrinking. Who would have thought you could earn a master's degree at a United States university without being in the U.S.A.? Ten years ago, if someone said to me I would be able to do this, I would have been more than surprised.

But it's a reality. May 9, 2004, will remain as one of the most unforgettable days in my life. At La Salle's Commencement in Philadelphia, my name was mentioned at the opening of the ceremony. I stood among my fellow graduates—my classmates—that I have never met. Isn't it amazing? Oh, yes, it is.

Sitting in my row in McCarthy Stadium during the graduation ceremony, I could not believe that I was a part of all of this. My thoughts brought me back to 1996—the year I first started thinking of enrolling in the Communication and Public Relations Program. All the universities in Prague only offered M.B.A. courses in the evenings. I was not interested in earning an M.B.A., but there were no other courses offered by any of the schools in Prague.

I work for Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty, as Director of the Kazakh Broadcasting Service. So, among dozens of target countries, we broadcast to Kazakhstan, a very controversial former Communist Central Asian country of 15 million. Corruption and dictatorship are major characteristics of the country's current regime. Every day at work is a fight for democracy and human rights. Current Kazakh youth and their orientation in the drastically changing world is another issue to be taken under consideration in our everyday work.

Taking all that into account, one can easily suggest that the mission of the 51-year-old company I work for is crucial. In such circumstances, one of the most important challenges faced by my service is the changing media market in the target country of Kazakhstan.

In 2002, I was lucky to learn that the University of New York

A TOWER OF STRENGTH

BY KIMBERLY MACALISTER, M.A. '04

As Cathy Carchidi '04, stood in a foot of water in her basement, she looked up and said, "God, I have been through the fire and the flood, but I will not do the locusts."

The flood, caused by Hurricane Floyd, is one of three major tragedies Carchidi has endured, including a devastating fire, and the unexpected death of her mother.

But through it all, Carchidi fought back. She relied on her family, her faith, and her fortitude to stay focused and never lose sight of her goals—which included earning her bachelor's degree—after 38 years in the making.

"There were a lot of obstacles, and, at times, I felt like I would never make it," Carchidi said. "But through tragedy, you can become a tower of strength that you never thought possible."

Carchidi's quest began when, as a senior in high school, she volunteered to fill a teacher shortage in the city's Catholic school system. She began taking required elementary education classes at a local college.

But in 1970, when she was only 22, Carchidi's mother died suddenly of a heart attack at the age of 45. One of seven children, Carchidi and her sister Joan took on the responsibility of raising their younger brothers and sisters who ranged in age from five to 13 years old.

"I had to center on my family," Carchidi said. "They needed me and I needed them."

By 1976, her siblings were a little older, and Carchidi was able to enroll at La Salle, changing her major to religion. She continued for two years, and completed 16 courses while working full-time and tending to her brothers and sisters.

Carchidi had her first child in 1979, and, as a single mother, money was tight; once again, she had to take time off from school. After marrying in 1984 and having a second child, Carchidi took courses at La Salle when she could. But tragedy struck again.

On January 31, 1996, at 1:40 a.m., Carchidi's family was awakened by the sound of smoke alarms. She and her husband rescued their three children from their beds and safely evacuated the house. A faulty gas fireplace installed just 21 days earlier caused the fire.

"We literally lost everything including our family dog, Princess. I never thought we would get past it, but as a family, we pulled through. We prayed, we went to counseling, and we somehow moved on with the overwhelming support that we received from so many people," she said.

Carchidi resumed classes at St. Charles Seminary in 2000. It was then that Hurricane Floyd hit, and her home was flooded.

"We were left picking up the pieces once again," she said.

Carchidi did pick up the pieces and continued on. She enrolled at La Salle in the fall of 2002.

"I wanted to graduate from La Salle. I had a tremendous experience there. The faculty always stood by me and I am forever in Prague had started a new graduate program in Professional Communication and Public Relations. Life consists of coincidences. I learned about the program from my colleague about two months after officials of the U.S. Broadcasting Board of Governors, the U.S. official body working with U.S. Broadcasting Abroad, introduced us to their new concept called: "Marrying Mission to the Market." In other words, not only our programs' contents, but also the competitive environment in the target countries turned to become of great importance. Needless to say, I decided to jump into the University of New York in Prague's program immediately.

Later, I learned that the program was through La Salle University. From the very first module at the University, I have never regretted that I decided to enroll. It was not an easy year, though: late Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays; my two daughters protesting my absence on weekends; my precious wife's hard work to help me with my studies. All of that is behind me now.

Two months before the graduation ceremony at La Salle, I spent one month in Kazakhstan. The knowledge I have received at La Salle was very useful. I applied as much as I could while there. Five television shows, press conferences, and special programs with local newspapers surely raised the awareness about our programs among the population of Kazakhstan.

We are moving forward with the rapidly changing world. Surely, La Salle helped me to make my move forward more dynamic and more successful. Thank you, La Salle! Thank you, University of New York in Prague!

grateful for all of their support," she said.

On her graduation day, Carchidi's husband, three children, and the brothers and sisters she helped raise were there to celebrate with her.

"Oh, I cried," she said. "But they were happy tears this time."

Carchidi has two more years left before retiring as Supervisor at Lawncrest Recreation Center, where she has worked for the past 18 years.

"I get paid to help people recreate their minds, hearts, and spirits. But now with my degree, after I retire, I may be able to go back to the other job that sparked my heart—teaching," she said.

was title. I thought that was nursing, and I wanted to do what my mom was doing," Rafferty said.

As she got older, Rafferty understood that her mom wasn't a nurse, but she decided to go with her instincts. "I had been saying I wanted to be a nurse for so long. I just stuck with it," she said.

Rafferty persevered and earned the academic nursing award for having the highest G.P.A. in the day school's Nursing Program. On top of excelling academically, she also discovered the answer to the question she was often asked:

"I never fully understood why I wanted to be a nurse until I started working with patients," she said. "It is easy to say that you want to be a nurse so you can help people, but nurses don't just help people—they touch and affect their lives—and patients do the same for nurses."

Since graduation, Rafferty is working at Abington Hospital in the orthopedic unit. She deals with a variety of patients, from those suffering bone trauma due to car accidents or falls, to those who voluntarily elect for surgery such as knee and hip replacements.

"My patients are in pain, and it is my job to make them comfortable," she said. "Every little thing you do for a patient is to make their stay in the hospital a little more bearable."

While at La Salle, Rafferty participated in community service activities such as Project Appalachia, where instead of soaking up the sun on Spring Break, students travel to Kentucky and build homes for the poor. "It was an amazing experience that helped with my career because it enhanced my compassion for others," she said.

"La Salle's Nursing Program gave me the intense training I need to succeed in this field, and I am excited to be out working and putting my skills to the test," she said.

CHANGING LIVES/ TOUCHING LIVES

BY KIMBERLY MACALISTER, M.A. '04

"With this degree, I have the potential to touch someone's life and change it for the better every day," said Megan Rafferty, '04 who earned her Bachelor of Science in Nursing at this May's Commencement.

Ever since she was a little girl, Rafferty said she wanted to be a nurse. But she never had her own reasons for wanting to pursue the profession, until she entered La Salle and started getting first-hand experience.

"My mom worked in a hospital as an x-ray technician. When I

DESPITE PHYSICAL OBSTACLES, TIMOTHY DUFFY GRADUATES FROM LA SALLE WITH AN ACCOUNTING JOB WAITING FOR HIM

BY JORDAN BURKE, '04

Like his La Salle University classmates, senior accounting major Timothy Duffy, '04, read the instructor's comments on the blackboard during class. He just used a monocular, which looks like a tiny telescope.

The Levittown, Pa., resident is legally blind but driven enough to pursue his passion for accounting.

"I have strong prescription glasses, and I use the monocular to see the blackboard. For the computer, I use larger fonts," says Duffy. "I am legally blind, but I can see. My vision is hard to explain to people, because I don't know what 20/20 really is. I will never know, but everything is clear."

Timothy Duffy Jr., '04 (left), celebrated his graduation from La Salle with his parents, Timothy Sr., and Patricia. Duffy is legally blind, but driven to pursue a degree in accounting. He graduated with 3.69 G.P.A. (magna cum laude) and was a member of the crew team for three years. He is now employed with PricewaterhouseCoopers.

La Salle classmates have helped him take notes, but he also has the excellent support of the Accounting Department.

"[Being an accounting major] was a fun experience. The teachers made it even better because they willingly worked one-on-one with the students," Duffy said. "The entire department basically would bend over backwards to make sure that I could understand everything."

"Tim did the things that every student should do, whether they're vision impaired or not," says Mary Jeanne Welsh, Ph.D., chair of the La Salle Accounting Department, who had Duffy for two courses. "If he was reviewing for an examination and didn't understand something, he came in and asked me about it. We went over the material."

"Tim is very focused," she said.

Since attending high school, Duffy has enjoyed accounting; he finally decided to pursue it as a career. He will cash in on years of schooling and hard work after he graduates and begins a job at PricewaterhouseCoopers, an international accounting firm with its local office at 20th and Market streets in Philadelphia.

"I worked as an intern last summer in the tax department there, and after the internship ended, they extended me an offer for full-time employment once I graduated" recalls Duffy.

"I fit in great with the people at PwC," he says. "I felt I had a good connection with all of the people in the firm. I really sensed that I fit well with PwC's culture."

Duffy is also an athlete, and since freshman year, he has rowed for La Salle's crew team. Although he was admittedly not the greatest at the sport, Duffy enjoyed the exercise and challenge of crew.

But in order to maintain his high grades, Duffy reluctantly left the team this past year to concentrate on schoolwork.

"It was a hard decision," he explains, "because I had started since freshman year, so it became a big part of my life. I really enjoy the sport though, and I would like to row for a club team for fun after I graduate."

Duffy has many goals, including learning more about his profession.

"Hopefully, with working at PwC, my knowledge of accounting will increase so that I can move up the ranks. My ultimate goal is to one day become a partner in the firm," says Duffy.

Great expectations. But his passion to achieve does not end with his professional life.

"As of right now, I am unable to drive," Duffy says. "But I feel that one day I will be able to. With all of the new technology continually developing, anything is possible."

IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF GIANTS

Tom McAllister Accepted into Prestigious Iowa Writers' Workshop

BY JORDAN BURKE, '04

John Irving. Flannery O'Connor. Raymond Carver. Tom McAllister. Tom McAllister? What do they have in common? The first three are well-known writers who graduated from the University of Iowa's Writers' Workshop. McAllister, a 2004 graduate, was recently accepted into the prestigious Iowa program.

"After I got accepted, a professor [who also graduated from Iowa's writing program] told me that statistically, the Iowa Writers' Workshop is harder to get into than M.I.T.," McAllister said. "It was a huge relief. After being rejected by three other schools, I was losing confidence. I guess I was relieved at first, followed by a rush of excitement."

"The only reason I applied to Iowa was because Dr. [Vincent] Kling ['68] made me, and I figured it was worth a shot," he said.

"Admission to a highly coveted place in the Iowa Writers' Workshop is based mainly on a writing sample, so it's obvious that Tom's ability is what won him this distinction," says Kling, a professor of English at La Salle. "Having worked with Tom on the writing project that earned him his admission, I can testify—as a reader only, but a very avid one—to the skill that brought content and form to such a level of mature artistry."

This past semester at La Salle, McAllister worked with Kling to complete an honors project that included five short stories. He sent in three of those stories, "The Burial," "Sleeping Troubles," and "Cooking the Sacred Cow," with his application to Iowa.

McAllister's stories are set in Roxborough in different time periods. He says that nothing really extraordinary ever happens, nothing really shocking.

"I try to get a picture for real life and show it to the reader," he says. "Then I just leave the judgments up to the reader."

"Sleeping Troubles," for example, is about a female oncology nurse who is forced to deal with the death of her husband when he is diagnosed with cancer.

McAllister says he has been writing since high school, but not seriously. He began to focus more on his creative writing during his junior year of college, and switched his major to the English Department's writing program.

"I like the feeling I get right after I finish writing something I think is good," McAllister says. "My family always says it's good. But it's an even better feeling when an unbiased reader thinks it's really good. That's a great feeling."

McAllister says that his writing is greatly influenced by the novelist Chris Offutt. Justin Cronin, a former professor of creative writing at La Salle University, recommended Offutt to him.

"You can definitely see Offutt's influence in the dialogue of my writing," McAllister said.

McAllister's family has also encouraged his writing.

"My dad used to read a lot, like five or six books a week," McAllister remembers. "He would get me reading them after he was finished, and then I started writing on my own. I guess I realized I might be pretty good and went from there."

The support of the La Salle faculty has greatly helped McAllister.

"Dr. Kling is just great for encouragement," McAllister said. "He keeps you focused and working hard. He also had some really great ideas to improve my stories. Most importantly, though, he is an educated friend who really helps me out."

McAllister begins school at Iowa this fall. He has many goals for the future.

"Ultimately, I would like to write," he says, "but I plan to teach creative writing in college so that I can have free time to continue my writing and also financial security. I have to pay the bills."

President's Cup 2004: A Hit Once Again

More than 230 alumni, parents, and friends of La Salle turned out for the sixth annual President's Cup Golf Tournament at the Blue Bell Country Club on April 19. All proceeds from the event—which totaled $222,000—benefit scholarship and financial aid resources for La Salle students. Hosted and sponsored by Elmer F. (Bud) Hansen Jr., '58, and Bud Hansen III, '90, M.B.A. '96, the day's events included golf, team prizes, individual skills awards, live and silent auctions, and a raffle drawing. Nicholas A. Giordano, '65, served as master of ceremonies.

La Salle's Newest Graduate Program: History

La Salle University's History Department will offer a brand new master's degree program beginning this fall. The program has two tracks: the traditional M.A. in History and an M.A. in History for Educators.

"The timing was right," said Charles Desnoyers, Ph.D., Chair of the History Department. "Plus, many of our history students have told us they love La Salle, and they want to stay here. Now, with this degree, they can."

George Stow, Ph.D., will direct the program. The curriculum was designed by Desnoyers, Stow, and Francis Ryan, '69, Ed.D., Director of La Salle's American Studies Program.

"What makes this program unique is that we're blending traditional readings courses with primary-source-based, historical analysis courses," Ryan said. "And the track for educators is not just for teachers. The degree can be used by museum specialists, archivists, and those planning careers in public history."

Desnoyers, Stow, and Ryan say that the La Salle program is one of the first graduate history programs in the nation that has core requirements in oral history, visual history, material culture, and archival analysis, in addition to traditional readings courses.

The education track is also innovative, combining the content of history—the historical works themselves—with methods of how to teach history. The track will help middle and secondary school teachers maintain active certification status and reach the "highly qualified teacher" category.

The program offers concentrations in American history, European history, and world history.

SLHS Receives Foundation Support, Other Grants Awarded

A local charitable foundation has awarded La Salle University's Speech-Language-Hearing Science (SLHS) Program a three-year grant of approximately $300,000 to educate speech-language pathology graduate students to work with the region's oral-deaf community and to establish a link between the La Salle and the Clarke Pennsylvania Auditory/Oral Center in Bryn Mawr, Pa. An oral-deaf person is someone who uses speech rather than sign language as his or her major mode of communication.

"Few programs in Speech-Language Pathology in the nation and none in this area educate Speech-Language Pathology students specifically to care for the needs of the oral-deaf community," says Barbara Amster, Ph.D., Director of La Salle's SLHS Program.

The grant will be used to provide partial scholarships for SLHS students; fund a full-time faculty member who will have a joint appointment at the Clarke Pennsylvania Auditory/Oral Center and La Salle; provide teaching and laboratory equipment; design and implement a course to educate students on meeting the needs of the oral-deaf community; and transform existing undergraduate Speech-Language-Hearing Science courses into a Web-based, distributive learning format.

One aim of the grant is to educate more Speech-Language Pathology students on how to facilitate speech in deaf individuals using a process called the auditory-oral approach. "It's a wonderful method, but Speech-Language Pathologists usually aren't trained in this technique, so we want to increase the number of persons who can serve the needs of the oral-deaf community," Amster said. "Given the appropriate educational opportunities, Speech-Language Pathologists who are trained in the auditory-oral method can make a huge difference in the speech communication capabilities of oral-deaf people."

NEWCOMBE FOUNDATION

In addition, The Charlotte W. Newcombe Foundation has awarded La Salle University a $29,000 grant to provide financial assistance for non-traditional women students over the age of 25 who are halfway through their college education. Five thousand dollars of the grant is intended as a challenge to the University to seek an equal amount in matching funds from other donors to build the existing Newcombe Endowed Scholarship Fund.

Elizabeth Heenan, Director of La Salle's Continuing Studies Program, said, "Through my personal experience, I know that this grant has made a significant difference in the lives of our women students. It enables them to continue on with their goal of obtaining a college degree."

"This grant is more than just being recognized for academic achievement. It really makes a difference as to whether or not these students are able to continue their education," Heenan added.

Each year, about 20 women students at La Salle receive aid from the Newcombe Foundation. Since 1981, the foundation has provided nearly $500,000 in grants to La Salle students.

THE SALLIE MAE FUND

The University also received a $20,000 grant from The Sallie Mae Fund of the Community Foundation for the National Capital Region to provide scholarship assistance to students in La Salle's Bilingual Undergraduate Studies for Collegiate Advancement (BUSCA) Program during the 2004-05 academic year.

BUSCA (which means "to search for" in Spanish) is designed to provide students who primarily speak Spanish with the opportunity to pursue a university education while gradually learning English. Students take their "content" courses for the first two years in Spanish, while they take (for credit) English as a Second Language. They are then able to begin taking other regular university courses in English. Students will receive an associate's degree and are automatically accepted at La Salle to continue for their bachelor's degree.

La Salle to Offer Graduate Psychology Classes at Gwynedd-Mercy College

La Salle University and Gwynedd-Mercy College officials recently signed an agreement to offer La Salle's Master of Arts in Clinical-Counseling Psychology program at Gwynedd-Mercy College beginning in Fall 2004. Gwynedd-Mercy already offers La Salle's M.B.A. Program on its campus. From left (front row): Dr. Denise Wilbur, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Gwynedd-Mercy College; and Thomas Keagy, Dean of the School of Arts and Sciences, La Salle University; (back row) Walter Griffin, Vice President for Finance, Gwynedd-Mercy College; and Dr. John Rooney, '46, Director of the Master of Arts program in Clinical-Counseling Psychology, La Salle University and Gwynedd-Mercy.

La Salle Student Government Lauded as Nationwide Model

The La Salle University Students' Government Association (S.G.A.) received top honors as Student Leader magazine's Spring 2004 cover story. The magazine called the association a model for other student governments nationwide.

"La Salle's S.G.A. has made extraordinary progress in building relationships with their administration this year," the magazine's editors said in a statement. "With a population of only 5,500, the strength of La Salle's community depends on students having close, personal bonds with faculty and staff members. Joseph J. Cicala [Ph.D., '79, Dean of Students and S.G.A. advisor] has worked together with S.G.A. officials to strengthen the relationships between the students and the administration."

The magazine's statement also quoted Bill Wiegman, '04, S.G.A. president for the 2003-04 school year: "Students come to La Salle because they see that they can build these sorts of relationships with the faculty,"

Wiegman said. "We just take those relationships to another level with staff and administration."

Student Leader also noted that La Salle's S.G.A. "realized that the majority of La Salle's population didn't grasp how much work administrators were doing on the students' behalf. In response, S.G.A. helped create a weekly newsletter of meeting minutes and announcements to keep students informed about what's going on in the administration."

Frank Ciaburri, '04, who was an executive S.G.A. senator, was quoted as saying, "Many students recognize that the people running their school are working for them and not against them."

Students Support Rape Kit Awareness

Sometimes all it takes is a little exposure to get people involved in a cause. Mary Ellen Balchunis-Harris, Assistant Professor of Political Science at La Salle University, showed her Women In Politics class a segment of The Oprah Winfrey Show that depicted a national problem: unexamined rape kits sitting on police department shelves while rape suspects continued to prey upon new victims. Rape kits contain DNA and other potential material evidence gathered from a rape victim.

Philadelphia District Attorney Lynn Abraham

Moved by what they saw, the class took it upon themselves to organize an event to create awareness and raise funds to analyze rape kits more efficiently and effectively. On April 16, 2004, in conjunction with Women Organized Against Rape, Balchunis-Harris' class hosted a conference entitled Saving Women's Lives: Support Funding to Process Rape Kits, on campus.

Speakers included Lt. Michael Boyle of the Philadelphia Police Department's Special Victims Unit, and Lynn Abraham, District Attorney of Philadelphia, who explained the power of DNA evidence and the importance of quickly processing rape kits so that suspects are apprehended before they attack again. The conference raised awareness on campus, and the profits went to various organizations and the Office of the District Attorney to support rape kit analysis.

La Salle Fraternity Helps Family in Need

A comedy show held by La Salle University's Sigma Phi Lambda fraternity raised nearly $2,000 for the family of Alexis Santiago, a La Salle student from the Olney neighborhood who died from injuries sustained in a house fire last fall.

According to the police, the fire was caused by arson. Santiago and several relatives perished, and the home was destroyed. For a short while, the surviving family members were living in a church basement.

Santiago, a freshman in La Salle's Bilingual Undergraduate Studies for Collegiate Advancement (BUSCA) Program at the time, died three days after the fire. The BUSCA program is designed for Spanish-speaking students who want to gradually learn English while earning their bachelor's degrees.

"Since 1935, Sigma Phi Lambda has been a La Salle fraternity," said fraternity member Adam Voisard. "Alexis Santiago was a student in the La Salle BUSCA Program, and, thus, a member of the Lasallian community. When we became aware that the Santiago family, members of the Lasallian community, were in need, we decided to provide whatever help we could to the family."

Three comedians—Chris Morris, Eric Roth, and David Kayle—performed at the University's Dan Rodden Theatre. In addition to ticket sales, the fraternity accepted contributions to help the family.

TOM GOLA ARENA

La Salle's new athletics logo was recently added to the Tom Gola Arena floor in Hayman Hall. The center-court version, which carries on the tradition of blue and gold, features the Explorer mascot along with the University name.

Alumni Celebrate at Reunion Weekend 2004

Over 525 alumni and guests gathered on May 14 and 15 for Reunion 2004. The weekend's festivities, which included campus tours, class dinners, live music, and a simulated Night in Vegas, kept all generations entertained.

Reunion Weekend kicked off on Friday night with a concert on the main quad featuring the band Speed. It was a hit with the young alumni crowd. Then, the casual atmosphere of Saturday's family picnic and kids' carnival was a main attraction for the many alumni who brought their families back to campus.

Themed class dinners enabled alumni to catch up with old friends while sitting down to a beautifully prepared meal. The 50th, 45th, 40th, and 25th reunion classes enjoyed fine dining at the elegant plated dinners selected for them, while the rest of the classes celebrated New Orleans-style with a festive Mardi Gras buffet, complete with Baton Rouge rib eye and bourbon chocolate pecan tarts.

"Our class had a great turnout," said

Jim Morris, '79, Senior Vice President at SEI Investments, who celebrated his 25th reunion. "I saw a lot of old friends, and thought everything was really well done."

It was the first time Chris Bentz, '89, teacher and coach at Lancaster Catholic High School, who celebrated his 15th year reunion, attended reunion festivities. He and his wife arrived just in time for Saturday's family picnic and took advantage of the overnight accommodations provided by the University.

"It was a great 24-hour experience. The food and activities were excellent," Bentz said.

"My wife and I loved the Night in Vegas. We had a great time, and we aren't going to wait as long to come back."

Plans are already underway for Reunion 2005. Please contact the Alumni Office at 215.951.1535 to get involved.

Renowned Professor of Philosophy, John Caputo, '62, Accepts Prestigious Appointment at Syracuse University

After 36 years as a professor of philosophy at Villanova University, renowned philosopher John Caputo, '62, will join the faculty at Syracuse University as the Thomas J. Watson Professor of Religion and Humanities.

Caputo's work in the field of continental European philosophy has earned him national recognition. In all, he has authored or edited 14 books and published more than 100 articles and book chapters.

In the past three years, two books about his thought have appeared.

According to Richard B. Pilgrim, Associate Professor and Chair of the Religion Department at Syracuse, "This is a real coup for Syracuse University and the Department of Religion. Jack works at the intersection of religion and philosophy. His name and notoriety will attract students in both disciplines."

After earning his bachelor's degree from La Salle, Caputo went on to earn his master's degree from Villanova and his doctorate from Bryn Mawr College. He has spent his entire professional career at Villanova, and is responsible for starting its doctoral program in philosophy in 1993.

Although he taught in Villanova's philosophy department, Caputo always had a special interest in the tradition of religious theory and the philosophy of religion.

"It is difficult to pull up roots after 36 years," Caputo said. "But I am looking forward to teaching a new audience at Syracuse. Rather than only teaching students earning philosophy degrees, I will be teaching students earning doctorates in religion as well."

"It should be a nice adventure," Caputo added.

"I have a good six or seven teaching years left in me," Caputo said. "My appointment at Syracuse is a wonderful thing to do at the end of my career."

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT REUNION

On April 4, 2004, the English Department hosted a get-together for alumni and past and present faculty to reconnect. The department's first reunion was held five years ago. Based on the success of these two events, the department intends to continue hosting reunions in five-year increments. This year, an estimated 150 guests attended the event held in La Salle's Ballroom. Top left: Kevin J. Harty, Ph.D., Chair of the English Department; Tom Keagy, Ph.D., Dean of Arts and Sciences; and Carmella Iaria, '00, get reacquainted. Bottom: The event drew alums from five decades.

Flubacher Award

In April, the Economics Department presented its annual Flubacher Scholarship, which was established in 1996 by alumni, faculty, and staff who were inspired by the example of the late Dr. Joseph Flubacher, '35, a former La Salle professor of economics. Besides high scholastic achievement, the winner of this award must demonstrate a commitment to social peace and justice.

This year two recipients were honored: Army Sgt. Sean Berk, '04, the 2003 honoree, and Thomas DiCamillo, '05, this year's honoree, both economics majors. Berk was unable to attend last year's ceremony because he was serving his tour of duty in the Middle East.

DiCamillo worked this past summer as an intern for the U.S. Department of Commerce in Washington, D.C. At La Salle, among numerous other activities, he has been a member of Peer Educators, an organization run by the Division of Student Affairs, since his freshman year.

"I know that no matter what career awaits me after college, I will bring to the job my Catholic values, which have always brought with them a responsibility to speak up or act on social issues," DiCamillo said.

Berk's deployment to Iraq gave him a unique perspective on his commitment to social justice.

"To go to Iraq, I had to delay my studies by two years, but there I got an education that cannot be replicated in a classroom," Berk said. "During my 'study abroad,' my thoughts frequently turned to Dr. Flubacher, his life, and what being the recipient of his scholarship meant to me. And what it means to me is that one person can make a difference in the world."

At La Salle's Beta Gamma Sigma induction ceremony on April 1, three distinguished alumni were honored for their achievements in business. Their accomplishments exemplify honor, wisdom, and earnestness as signified in Beta Gamma Sigma. (From left) John W. Turner Jr., '69, President and Chief Executive Officer of J.W. Turner was a 2003 chapter honoree, but was unable to attend last year's event.

MICHAEL A. DEANGELIS AWARD

Beta Gamma Sigma Named Outstanding Chapter

La Salle's chapter of Beta Gamma Sigma was named the outstanding chapter in the United States and the world for 2004 out of nearly 400 chapters internationally. The honor society recognizes the highest-ranking students from AACSB International-accredited business programs.

For this recognition, the society provides a $1,500 scholarship to a La Salle student in the School of Business.

"Beta Gamma Sigma requires only academic performance to be inducted, but we want our students to give back to the University community," said Susan Borkowski, Ph.D., a La Salle professor of accounting and the faculty advisor for the La Salle chapter. "We ask inductees to mentor freshman students, and we ask graduate students to participate in our annual Banker's Day event to judge freshman teams' business plans. Our students deserve it, because it requires so much beyond studying."

From Student-Athletes to Professional Coaches

BY MEAGHANN SCHULTE AND KALE BEERS, '95

Many La Salle University alumni who participated in athletics during their college days have gone on to be successful in their professional lives. A good number of these alums have used their experiences as student-athletes at La Salle to get them to where they are today.

Explorers are represented all over the world in athletics. From swimming to basketball, broadcasting to coaching, La Salle has had success in aiding student-athletes to pursue careers in the athletic world. The following are just two success stories:

Cheryl Reeve, '88

"If I hadn't played collegiate basketball, I would not have been turned on to coaching the sport, and be where I am today," said Cheryl Reeve, when asked how playing basketball at La Salle has influenced her professional life. Reeve is the assistant coach of the Charlotte Sting in the Women's National Basketball Association (WNBA).

While at La Salle, Reeve played basketball for four years, and had a one-year stint as a softball player. She left her mark on the Explorer women's basketball program, recording 420 total assists, making her fifth all-time in La Salle history. She is seventh all-time in La Salle history in career steals with 171. In her four-year career, Reeve started in 110 games, which ties her for second all-time. She is fourth in games played with 116.

"The NCAA mandates that you can only play four years of college basketball, or I would have played forever," said Reeve. "Luckily, Coach [John] Miller kept me on board as his graduate assistant, which was the first step in getting me to where I am today in coaching."

Reeve is in her fourth season in the WNBA. Prior to coaching professionally, she was the head coach for the Indiana State Sycamores from 1995-99, and was an assistant at George Washington University for five seasons. "Coaching is a means to continue being a part of what I love," Reeve said.

Jami Wilus, '02

Jami Wilus holds five of the six career records in the La Salle women's lacrosse history books. She played the most games (60), accumulated the most points (231), tallied 230 goals and 78 assists, and leads the school in draw controls with 90. Wilus not only holds these records, but she dominates the categories with gaps of over 100 in points, 135 in goals, 48 in assists, and 42 in draw controls.

Wilus is just finishing up her second year as the head women's lacrosse coach at North Penn High School, her alma mater. She feels, "The combination of academics and athletics at La Salle taught me so much about myself and prepared me for the future. Lacrosse has helped me in many ways professionally; the discipline, time management, and determination that I used for lacrosse has prepared me for coaching and teaching, while opening a window of opportunity for me in my professional life."

Breaking Down Barriers: Marie Hicks, '80, and Sons

Over 30 years ago, Marie Hicks, '80, asked why Girard College, a prestigious all-boys academic boarding school, was surrounded by a tall, looming wall. She didn't like the answer she received.

"I was told the wall was to keep blacks out," she said. "And that made me angry."

She teamed up with Cecil B. Moore, who led the Philadelphia branch of the NAACP, to fight for black students to gain admission to the school.

"I wanted to do something about it, because it wasn't right," she said. "Girard College was a really good school, and my boys should have the opportunity to go there."

In 1954, the Supreme Court announced its landmark decision in the case of Brown v. Board of Education, calling for the desegregation of schools. It was then that the fight with Girard College began. The struggle to integrate the school resulted in a 14-year lawsuit and included two trips to the U.S. Supreme Court, picketing, protesting, and a visit by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. For Hicks and her family, the struggle also included death threats and hate mail.

Hicks' son Theodore entered Girard College in September 1968 as one of four black students. Her older son Charles was admitted several months later. As students, their days were filled with harassment and hatred.

"It was hard on the boys, especially Charles, who was the only black boy in his class," she said. "But I explained to them the importance of what they were doing and why they needed to be strong."

In May 2004—50 years after the Brown v. Board of Education decision—Girard College marked the 30th anniversary of its first black graduate, Charles Hicks. The entire Hicks family returned to Girard's campus where both Charles and his mother spoke of the struggles and the triumphs of their fight. Theodore graduated from Girard a few years after his brother, and was the first black valedictorian.

Marie, whom Dominic C. Cermele, Girard College President, referred to as "our own Rosa Parks" in a May 2004 Philadelphia Inquirer interview, says she fought for what she believed in and would not back down, because she knew that, in the end, her actions would touch the lives of many people.

"I live my life knowing that, if you help someone along the way, your living was not in vain," Hicks said.

Indeed. Today, Girard College welcomes all applicants regardless of race or gender.

SHOULDER TO SHOULDER FOR THE FUTURE

"From the very start [the Christian Brothers] have understood that...education must equip youth with a genuine and efficient professional training and the means of making a living. And they have understood at the same time that the formation of the soul and the intellect, the bringing up of a human being as human, remains the highest and indispensable aim of education."

JACQUES MARITAN, FRENCH PHILOSOPHER
WRITING IN THE 1950S ABOUT THE LASALLIAN TRADITION

ON SEPTEMBER 12, 2004, LA SALLE PUBLICLY launched Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, the most ambitious fundraising effort in the University's history. This major gifts initiative is designed to bring the La Salle Community together in support of two key projects that, once realized, will sustain the University in the new century: funding the construction of a new science and technology facility, and strengthening the University's endowment.

The two goals of Shoulder to Shoulder have been carefully selected to capitalize on the momentum generated by new leadership and new programs at the University. They offer new opportunities for involvement for the entire La Salle community to help secure its future.

STRENGTHENING LA SALLE TOGETHER. SHOULDER TO SHOULDER

"Shoulder to Shoulder is the way many great things in this country have gotten accomplished," noted James J. Lynch, '71, Chair of the La Salle University Board of Trustees. "The theme of this fundraising effort was chosen specifically to reinforce the values at the heart of what will make this campaign a success: hardworking people—working together—to secure the future for La Salle."

Through Shoulder to Shoulder, the University is now calling upon those who have benefited from the Lasallian educational experience to support La Salle as it works toward achieving its goals and creating important resources to support future learning.

J. Hugh Devlin, '64, Chair of Shoulder to Shoulder, and Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70

"I have always admired the Brothers and their commitment to providing a Catholic education to good students of modest means, so that they can make their way in the world and also make the world a better place," remarked J. Hugh Devlin, '64, Chair of Shoulder to Shoulder. "It is my belief that this foundation of Christian Brothers values—rooted in connectedness and giving back—will inspire the alumni community to stand together to support the mission of La Salle through this important initiative."

"Great universities are great because their alumni make them so," added Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, President of La Salle University. "It is impossible for me to express how humbled I am to be standing here before you as President of this University and my deep gratitude to all who have given so generously to this campaign."

"I look forward to continuing to extend the University's network of association and to successfully completing this campaign, upon which, we—working together, Shoulder to Shoulder—will build the future of La Salle."

PROVIDING INNOVATIVE LEARNING RESOURCES

La Salle's mission aims at preparing students for informed service and progressive leadership in their communities, and science and technology skills are among the most sought after in today's employment marketplace. The University's well-earned reputation for preparing graduates to join the medical, nursing, education, science, and business professions will be enhanced by building a new science and technology facility (see architect's rendering above).

Today, science and technology touch many disciplines and influence many kinds of careers. Preparing men and women for rewarding professional lives demands a new kind of learning environment that recognizes this fact. Through this innovative facility, La Salle is reaffirming its commitment to addressing the new needs of science and technology in all academic areas—from the arts and sciences to nursing and business.

This new facility will feature an open floor plan designed especially to encourage collaboration and cross-disciplinary learning. This is the way modern science—and business—gets done, and it's the kind of learning environment La Salle students need. Such innovative programs as Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT), Digital Arts and Multimedia Design (DArt), the E-Commerce Institute, and majors in information technology are helping drive enrollment. Along with the traditional sciences, nursing, and business, such programs will flourish and grow in the new science and technology facility.

STRENGTHENING THE ENDOWMENT

St. La Salle and the Christian Brothers began as teachers among the working poor of 17th-century France. For some 300 years, a Christian Brothers education has meant helping students of all financial means build successful lives on an ethical foundation based on faith.

La Salle continues this tradition, offering education that balances a need for both personal and professional fulfillment to the widest possible range of students.

Today, more than 90 percent of students attend the University with some form of merit- and need-based financial aid. The ability to offer a La Salle education to every student of academic merit remains central to the University's mission, and serves as both a challenge and an opportunity for every member of the La Salle community.

La Salle must strengthen its endowment to continue to attract the best and brightest students, regardless of their financial background. A robust endowment is also one of the strongest statements of commitment to the value of a Christian Brothers education in the Lasallian tradition.

TOGETHER FOR THE FUTURE OF LA SALLE

As La Salle works to enhance its profile as a great University, these strategic goals have been established to secure critical resources that will enhance academic programs and meet student needs. They present opportunities for involvement for the entire La Salle community to work together—Shoulder to Shoulder—to secure La Salle's future.

James J. Lynch, '71, Chair of La Salle's Board of Trustees, and Leon E. Ellerson, '56, Trustee

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

Dear Friends of La Salle:

On behalf of the entire La Salle community, I want to express my sincere gratitude to all our benefactors. Through this report, I am delighted to recognize your generosity and sustained encouragement in fulfillment of our mission.

With your support, the University continues to be a dynamic educational community shaped by traditional Catholic and Lasallian values.

Our identity is firmly rooted in a deep respect for each individual, a belief that intellectual and spiritual development go hand in hand, a passion for creative teaching and learning, and that education should be useful—for personal growth, professional advancement, and service to others.

These beliefs have served as guideposts as we developed and continue to carry out the University's Strategic Plan. What follows are highlights of our progress during the past year.

One such highlight warrants special attention, which it has by way of the article that precedes this letter: "Shoulder to Shoulder for the Future." I encourage you to read this account of this significant fundraising initiative, whose goal is to raise $25 million for the construction of a new science and technology building and the strengthening of the University's endowment. To date, the University has raised $13.7 million towards that goal. We are especially grateful to those who already have given their support, and we encourage others to join in this worthwhile cause.

As I look to the future, I see La Salle continuing to build on the positive momentum of recent years, inspired by the committed leadership of our Board of Trustees. We pray that you will remain our partners in our endeavors. Thank you again for your generosity to La Salle and to our students.

Sincerely yours,

Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., '70
President

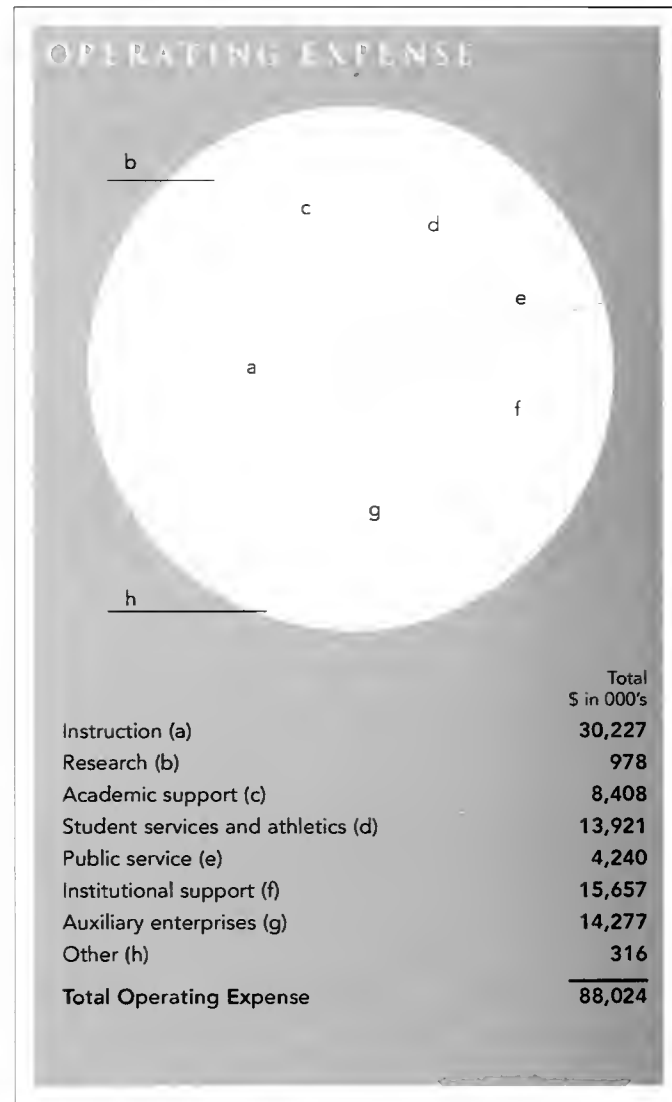

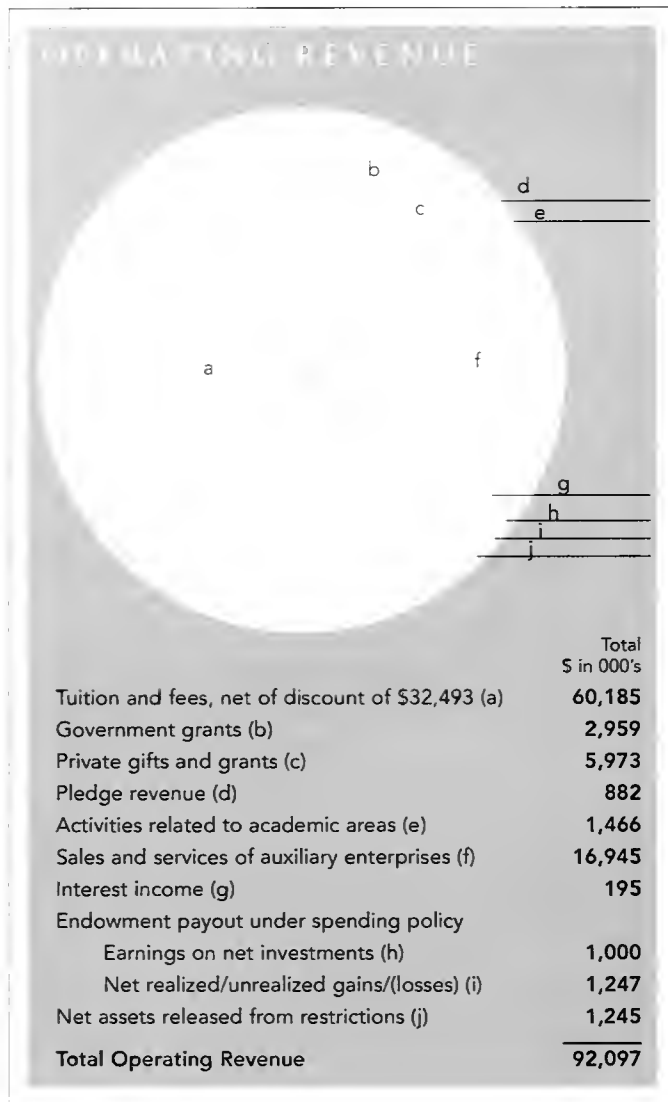

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE YEAR

ENHANCING OUR INTELLECTUAL AND SPIRITUAL LIFE

The strength of the University's curriculum is assured in part by meeting, or exceeding, the rigorous standards of accreditation. This year, two of our newer programs earned their accreditations: Speech-Language Pathology by the American Speech-Language Hearing Association, and the doctoral program in Psychology (Psy.D.) by the American Psychological Association. In addition, our School of Nursing's baccalaureate and master's degree programs were recently reaccredited by the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education for 10 years, the maximum accreditation allowed for an institution.

Further, La Salle has embarked on its self-study for reaccreditation by the Middle States Association, an institution-wide commitment for ongoing assessment and improvement.

The quality of our faculty continues to be one of La Salle's greatest assets. Our faculty has a passion for teaching and mentoring that touches our students' hearts and spirits as well as their minds. Working with the Faculty Senate, the Provost's Office has undertaken initiatives to provide even greater support to our valued faculty to carry out the teaching and learning mission of the University.

The experience of learning at La Salle has been enhanced by an increased emphasis on international education, with additional Study Abroad programs and 42 countries represented in the student body.

On the student side of the equation, the year has been marked by the development of programs to strengthen the advising system, including an early alert referral system for freshmen; this can only serve to improve La Salle's already stellar freshman-to-sophomore retention rate, a traditional strength of the University.

Students grow intellectually and spiritually beyond the curriculum as well, and much of the credit belongs to the Division of Student Affairs, which garnered a number of national honors for its work this year.

The University has continued its efforts to cultivate Catholic and Lasallian values in the curriculum, programs, and institutional culture. The faculty and administrators who are participating in the Lasallian Leadership Institute, a three-year national leadership program of the Christian Brothers, are setting the example.

EFFECTIVELY COMMUNICATING OUR DISTINCT IDENTITY

Building on the market research commissioned two years ago, which helped to define the University, La Salle has focused its efforts to communicate this identity. The La Salle community's values and approaches form our brand and distinct identity. It is the feeling that should come to mind when people hear the name of La Salle University.

The past year has seen the gradual introduction of La Salle's graphic identity. The new University logo began to appear on publications, in advertising, on banners around the campus, and on University vehicles. The new tagline, "Never stop exploring," has been introduced in printed materials and in radio commercials. The new athletics logo has proven popular with students for clothing and accessories.

While the consistency of our graphic identity is important to establishing our brand, communication of the essence of La Salle, as described by our positioning statement and key messages and language, is also critical. The University incorporates these messages at every appropriate opportunity. Moreover, the University is committed to having all in the campus community "live" the brand.

INVESTING IN OUR FUTURE

The University's commitment to making the personal, communal, and financial investments needed for future success is very evident this year. The $25 million Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future initiative (see preceding article) is testimony to the kind of investment our alumni are willing to make in La Salle. On campus, the most visible sign of investment is the construction of the new $26 million residence and dining facility on South Campus.

As the Honor Roll section attests, financial support for the University continues to grow. Total giving for the year approached $9.2 million. The Annual Fund increased for the third year in a row, highlighted by a nearly nine percent increase in participation in the past year. Funding from grants in the 2004 fiscal year—$5.6 million—was the highest single yearly total for La Salle. The National Science Foundation's five-year $12.5 million grant to a La Salle-led partnership to improve mathematics and science education in the region contributed greatly.

Continued investment in and use of technology remains a priority. This year witnessed the launch of a portal within the University's Web site for internal communications. Also, the foundation has been laid for campus-wide wireless Internet access.

ENHANCING THE QUALITY OF LIFE IN OUR COMMUNITY

La Salle's commitment to the community may have been symbolized by the establishment, last year, of the position of Director of Community and Economic Development, but our actions and influences are longstanding and significant. The University continues to be a major economic contributor and a model of community outreach and partnering.

Work is well under way on a new South Campus residence and dining facility, which will accommodate more than 430 students (see architectural rendering above). Completion of the buildings is slated for Summer 2005.

Our Nonprofit Center helps area nonprofit organizations govern themselves to fulfill their missions; the Neighborhood Nursing Center offers myriad health services to local residents; the University provides scholarships specifically for students from the community; La Salle offers educational programs and services for students of area public and private schools; University students volunteer more than 100,000 hours annually for community service projects; University facilities are made available and are well utilized by neighbors and local groups.

Special efforts this year have focused on converting 20th Street between Olney and Belfield avenues into a one-way street, resulting in fewer accidents. Also, La Salle representatives met more frequently with local residents to partner in neighborhood quality of life issues.

CULTIVATING PARTNERSHIPS WITH ALUMNI

Major steps have been taken to develop the alumni relations program. Five new clubs were added in the past year, and 35 events were held in 16 cities nationwide. Attendance at alumni events included increases of 25 percent at Reunion and 200 percent at Homecoming. On-line services on the Web site have been expanded, and an alumni portal was launched. The alumni e-mail database has been increased to more than 10,000.

A new Alumni Careers Committee has been charged with enhancing career networking programs. An Alumni Student Affairs Committee was created to further develop alumni relations with current students, and alumni have volunteered for everything from cleaning up nearby Fairmount Park to helping recruit prospective students.

Assistant Professor Joseph P. Cairo, '60, Economics Teacher for 40 Years, Dies at 66

Joseph P. Cairo, '60, who inspired economics students at La Salle for 40 years, died July 11 at his home in Ambler, Pa. He had been battling multiple myeloma for several years. Cairo was 66.

A graduate of La Salle College High School and La Salle College, Cairo earned a master's in economics from the University of Pennsylvania and joined La Salle's economics faculty in 1963. In 1967, he received the Lindback Distinguished Teaching Award.

"His whole adult life was dedicated to La Salle," said his son, Matthew Cairo. "He loved teaching young students. His favorite classes were the introductory classes because he got to really teach the students what was most fundamental to the study of economics."

"He was a wonderful guy and a tremendous teacher," said Joseph P. Mooney, Ph.D., '49, Professor Emeritus of Economics. "His students loved him. He had tremendous energy. I don't think anybody had more energy in the classroom, and that's what kept him going. It was very courageous of him to keep going like that for these past few years."

Mooney said Cairo would get so caught up in his teaching that his courses would run past the allotted time, and other teachers and students would have to stand outside until he had finished. "He'd say, 'Just one more thing,' and go on for 10 more minutes," Mooney said.

"My father loved the way the Christian Brothers taught, their philosophy about education, and that was what made it a natural for him to teach at La Salle," Matthew Cairo said. He said his father was also an avid collector of books about a wide variety of topics that interested him. "I'd guess there are about 10,000 books in his house," he said. Cairo earned a second M.A. in English from Temple University.
